Fake bomb puts scare into campus

Mary Emerson
staff writer

A device that appeared to be a bomb was found by a janitor at 7:30 a.m. Aug. 14. in Nichols Hall.

K-State Police evacuated Nichols and called the Fort Riley bomb squad, which determined the package was not a bomb.

Capt. Robert L. Mellgren of the campus police said a janitor was cleaning, found the device and called them.

The package was constructed with a shoe box, some road flares tied together and a large, old-fashioned silver alarm clock with bells on top.

The package was an old gag gift given to a professor two or three summers ago. It had been left in the building.

"It looked just like what a bomb would look like in laymen's terms — a picture bomb," Mellgren said.

The owner of the package could not be reached for comment.

Fort Riley bomb squad members pulled the device from the building using a rope. The bomb squad X-rayed the package and determined it was harmless.

"This turned out to be a hoax, and nothing serious happened except a loss of time," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said this incident won't keep the campus police from treating all possible bomb threats seriously.

"We will continue to treat each one as if it is real. If there are other things lying around out there like this, keep this in mind: those were real flares, and there was a lot of paper in the room — it could've been a fire hazard."

K-State Union hires new director

Cristina Janney
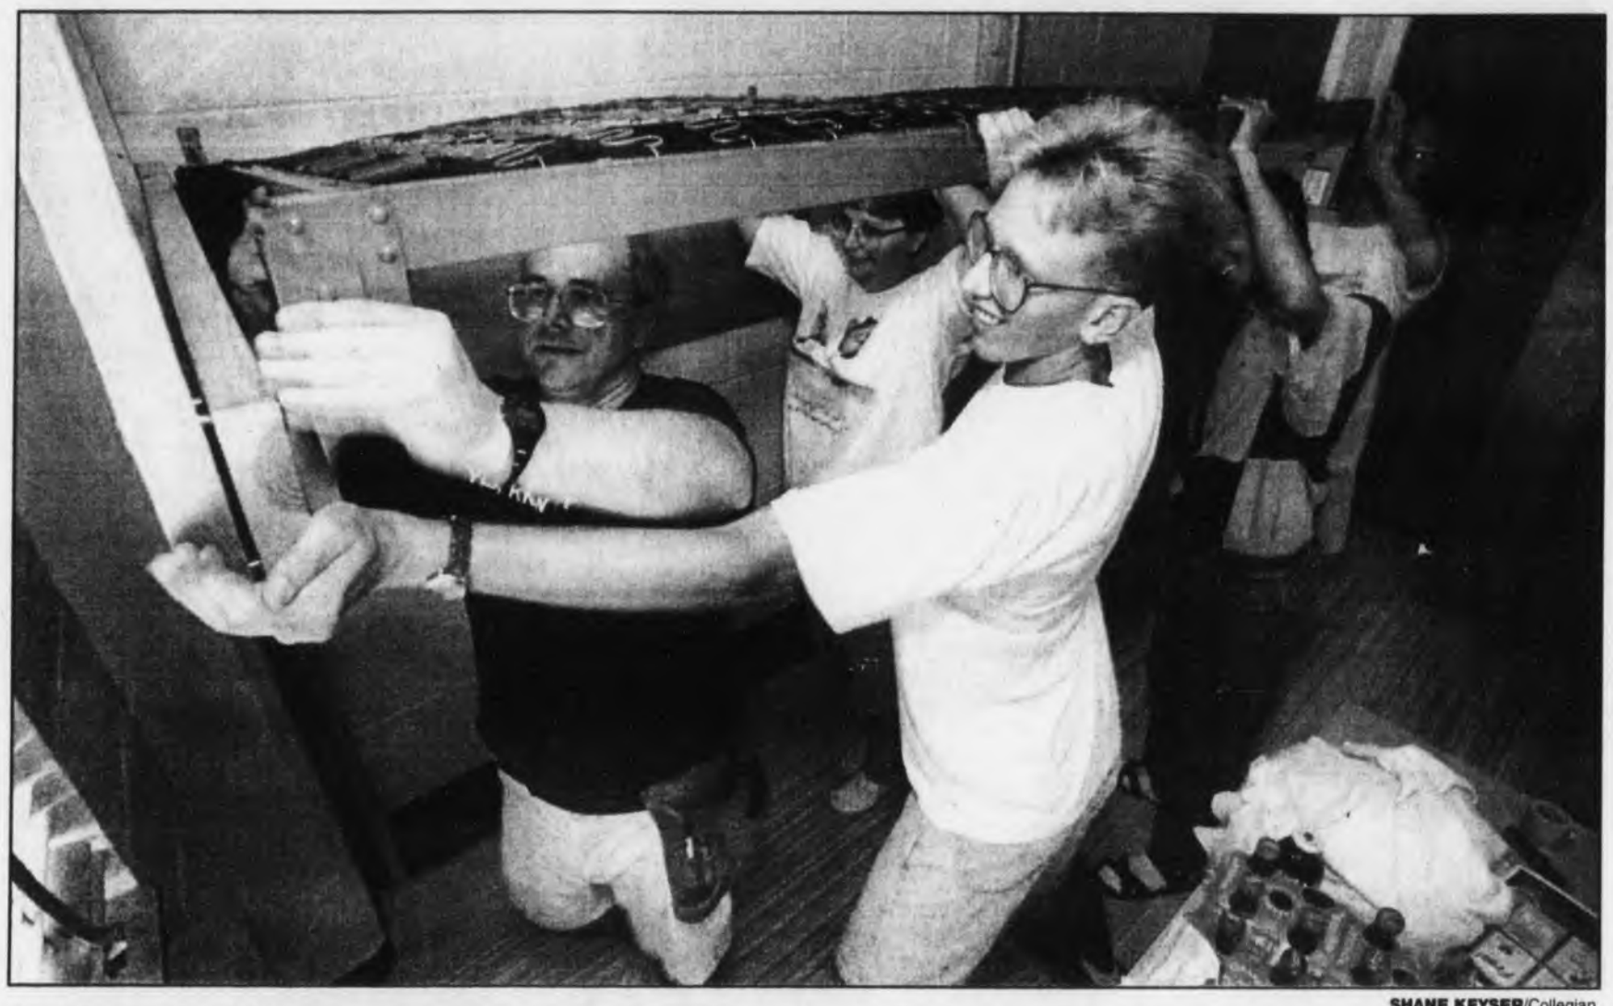
city-government editor

Bernard Pitts was hired as the new director of the K-State Student Union Wednesday.



"I am really excited and pleased I am going to be a part of the K-State community," Pitts said. "The K-State Union is one of the most highly regarded unions in the country."

Pitts has been the associate director of the Iowa State Memorial Union since 1991 and is the president-elect of the Association of College Unions-International.

Pitts was selected from four finalists who were interviewed on campus this summer. The finalists were chosen by a search committee, which was composed of students, faculty and staff.

Pitts will be in charge of the Union enhancement project when he takes over the director position Oct. 1.

Murdock and Hafer were along helping Murdock's son, Rusty Murdock, sophomore in architectural engineering, and his roommate Jeevan Padiyar, sophomore in chemical engineering, construct a wooden loft in their residence hall room. The idea behind the loft is to give the room more floor space.

Days of sweat and moving

In the midst of 100-degree weather, students moved back to Manhattan, into the residence halls and paid fees. Two students fainted during fee payment, while an all-male residence hall was surprised to be living with ... women.

Chris May
staff reporter

Paying fees was not the only obstacle waiting for K-State students at Ahearn Field House last week.

Two female students fainted Wednesday, the first day of registration, partially because of the heat inside Ahearn Marquita Davis, licensed practical nurse, said.

Heat was not the only factor causing the students to faint. Other elements contributed to the situation, she said.

One student who had been sick the night before and was still suffering the effects while paying fees suffered a seizure that was unrelated to the heat, Davis said.

"But the heat didn't help," she said.

The other student was found sitting on the steps by the first-aid booth inside Ahearn. The girl had no recollection of fainting, Davis said.

The heat might have been a factor in this case, along with the girl not eating breakfast Wednesday morning, Davis said. The student was treated by being placed in front of a fan to cool off.

Residents of Marlatt Hall, traditionally an all-male residence hall, arrived to find 79 women occupying the fourth floor.

"This is our 32nd year of operation, and this is the first time for female residents, excluding summer and guest housing," Dave Yoder, director of Marlatt, said.

Bob Burgess, assistant director for business operations of Housing and Dining Services, said renovations to the first and second floors of Goodnow Hall eliminated 80 female rooms.

In the past, the fourth floor of Marlatt was designated as guest housing, but administrators began assigning female students to Marlatt in late July because of a room shortage.

"The greatest majority of these students signed up for housing assignments in August, and we first started assigning females on the 28th of July," Yoder said.

Until permanent assignments are determined for the female students housed in Marlatt, the residence hall will have coed residence hall regulations, which include locking the doors at the end of the halls. Visitation and lock-down hours will remain the same.

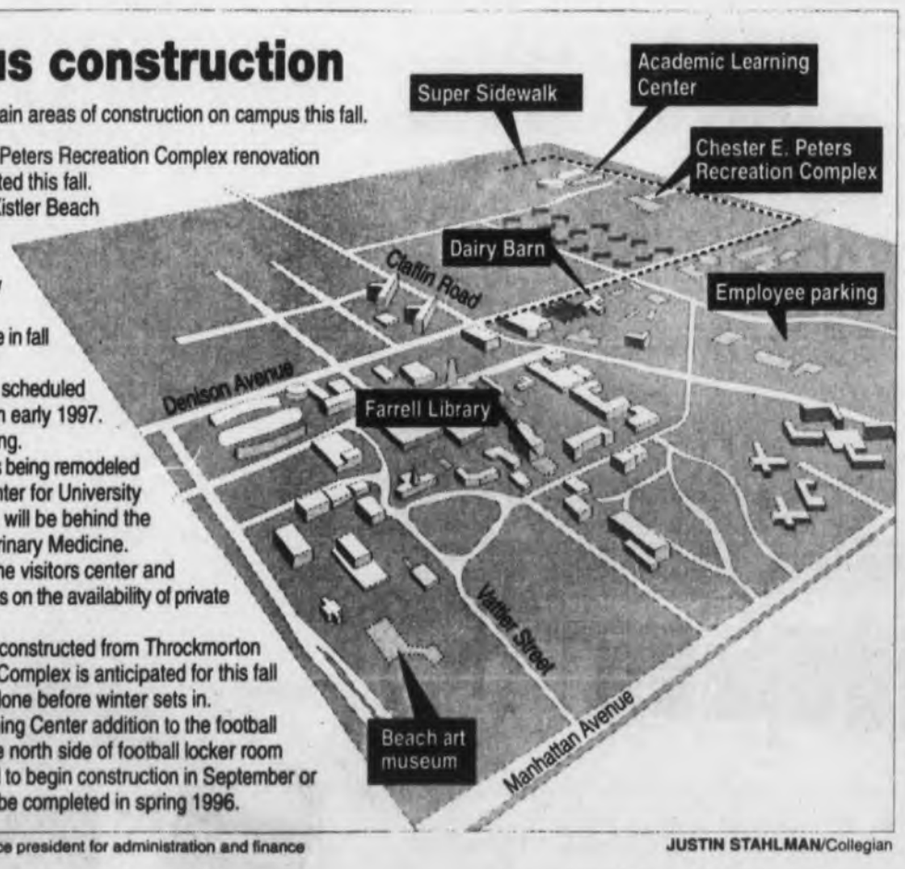
The number of women in Marlatt is expected to increase during the first weeks of fall semester as walk-in students without room assignments arrive and are relocated there, Yoder said.

Students on the fourth floor are without a resident assistant because the situation is temporary, Yoder said.

"It is our desire to have the students moved out as soon as possible," Burgess said. "We do not anticipate the students remaining there through the end of the semester."

Transfer student Colleen Rinkleff, junior in elementary education, said fourth-floor residents will receive a letter with their new room assignments when arrangements are made.

Rinkleff said she blames herself for being placed in temporary housing because she did not send her housing contract in until August.



"It's kind of hard to be thrown into here and be meeting people knowing you're going to leave," she said. "You

Campus construction

Here are seven main areas of construction on campus this fall.

1. The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex renovation is to be completed this fall.
2. The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of art is scheduled for completion May or June. Its dedication will be in fall 1996.
3. Farrell Library is scheduled for completion in early 1997.
4. Employee parking.
5. The Dairy Barn is being remodeled as a visitors center for University Gardens, which will be behind the College of Veterinary Medicine. Completion of the visitors center and gardens depends on the availability of private funding.
6. Super sidewalk constructed from Throckmorton Hall to the Rec Complex is anticipated for this fall and should be done before winter sets in.
7. Academic Learning Center addition to the football complex. On the north side of football locker room complex. Slated to begin construction in September or October and to be completed in spring 1996.

Cement truck driver bound over for trial

■ Man charged in death of former K-State student

Cristina Janney
city-government editor

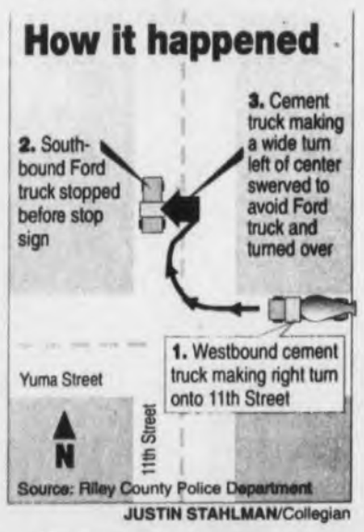
The driver of a cement truck that overturned and crushed a Manhattan man in February was bound over for trial Wednesday on charges of involuntary manslaughter.

Sean McAdams was driving westbound on Yuma Street and turning right onto 11th Street when his cement truck tipped over, killing Eric Martin, a 26-year-old former K-State student.

Martin's 2-year-old son, Brett, was in the truck but was not seriously injured.

At a preliminary hearing Wednesday, Judge Paul Miller said there was sufficient evidence that McAdams was driving recklessly on the day of the accident to warrant a trial on the involuntary manslaughter charges.

Kansas Highway Trooper Wes Wheeler testified skid marks at the scene of the accident showed McAdams, who was driving a truck owned by Kershaw Ready-Mix Concrete & Sand Co., was making a wide turn and was left of center at the time of the accident.



The marks showed McAdams had tried to swerve in an attempt to avoid Martin's black Ford half-ton pickup right before the accident occurred.

Martin had pulled over to the curb and stopped to allow the cement truck to pass. His truck was all the way against the curb, and there was nowhere for him to maneuver when the truck tipped over.

In a statement taken the day of the accident, McAdams said he did not see the truck when he started to make the turn.

Wheeler testified that from the corner of Yuma and 11th streets, a driver should have been able to see three times the distance of where Martin's truck was stopped.

Patrick Peters, assistant attorney general, said McAdams was going too fast to make the turn, so he had to turn wide and go left of center.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

However, no testimony was given to indicate McAdams was speeding.

Peters also argued McAdams was negligent for not looking for oncoming traffic before he started his turn.

"The pickup had nowhere to go. It

▶ NEW CHIEF OF STAFF SAYS SHE HOPES IDEAS CAN REPLACE EXPERIENCE

Jenni Cheatham, Student Body President Jeff Peterson's chief of staff, said what she lacks in experience she makes up for in fresh ideas.

"I'm not locked into old ideas. I think I bring a fresh new voice to student government," she said.

Cheatham, who has no previous experience in student government, was appointed to the position after former Chief of Staff Mike Zamrzla left the position because of other time commitments this summer.

Zamrzla will still be working in Peterson's administration directing the second year of the Access the Future campaign.

Access the Future is a student-government lobbying effort to keep the cost of tuition down.

Peterson said he chose Cheatham because of her leadership experience in other campus groups, including positions in her sorority, Delta Delta Delta, and the Panhellenic Council.

"She doesn't have any previous experience in student government, but I think that will help us. I have been here a year, and I think she will be able to bring in new ideas," Peterson said.

Cheatham said she wanted to be approachable so students can come to her to voice their questions and concerns.

Cheatham said two issues in which she has personal interest are K-State Student Union expansion and parking.

"I would like to see parking not be so much of a nightmare between students and Parking Services," she said.

Cheatham had been appointed as Living and Organizations Coordinator in Peterson's cabinet.

Peterson and his staff are trying to fill this position through an informal application process.

He said there is no deadline for applications, but he hoped to have all his cabinet positions filled soon so they could be confirmed at either the first or second Student Senate meeting.

The first Senate meeting is Thursday.

▶ PAWNSHOPS THRIVE WITH CASINO

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The pawnshop industry is thriving around the country, but police here have noted an extra reason for the boom — riverboat casinos.

At Little Joe's Pawn and Gun, a retired Leavenworth man comes in nearly every week to pawn his 1988 Buick Park Avenue for about $1,800. Then, an employee gives the man a ride to the riverboats.

Another shop, Lucky's Pawn & Loan, has been open only seven months but has had three customers pawn cars for riverboat betting money.

The pawnshop industry in Kansas City had fallen on hard times. Today, 38 shops are operating — four more than in 1979.

At least a dozen of the shops have opened in the last 18 months.

Police say they see a connection between the growing demand and casino gambling.

"It is really starting to surface as a reason for pawning," said Detective Mike Stuart, who monitors pawn shops for the Kansas City Police Department.

"It's starting to rear its ugly head. Almost everybody I've talked to at the pawnshops, they're saying they're dealing with people who have dropped one or two hundred the night before and need money to get through payday."

Most people who go to the riverboats, a riverboat spokesperson said, are your average people.

▶ YABBA DABBA DOO SPOKEN HERE

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Fred Flintstone is not from Bedrock. He is actually from this congested Asian city of 7 million people. So, too, are Tom and Jerry, the Biker Mice from Mars, Aladdin and Donald Duck.

American and other foreign cartoon producers are increasingly setting up shop in the Philippines because of lower production costs and the country's reputation for talented artists who understand American culture.

"I discovered that the animators were the best I had seen in Asia. They animate from their guts," said Colin Baker, the founder of Toon City, which has produced Walt Disney television shows such as "Timon and Pumbaa," a Lion King spin-off; "Duck Daze," featuring Donald Duck; and "Aladdin," a spinoff of the movie by that name.

Television cartoons have not been produced in the United States since the late 1970s because of high labor costs. About 90 percent of all American television cartoons are produced in Asia.

But most television cartoons are made for the American market. "(Filipinos) think Western so that when you have to do a cartoon that is going to be played primarily to Western audiences, you need to have a group of artists that can understand the humor that goes with it," said Bill Dennis, general manager of Fil-Cartoons Inc., a Hanna-Barbera subsidiary.

Privilege fees up for Senate scrutiny

Peterson

Potter

Tomb

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Members of Student Senate want students to pay for only what they use on campus.

Four student privilege fees are coming up for review during the 1995-96 term: Lafene Health Center, fine arts, athletics and Student Publications Inc. operating fees.

"Students are not attending Kansas Board of Regents schools because of the tuition and privilege fees," John Potter, senate chairman, said.

The trend of placing the financial burden for services on the students instead of on the state has made K-State more expensive than Pittsburg State University, Emporia State University and the University of Kansas.

Students pay $216.45 per semester in privilege fees at K-State.

Potter said Senate needs to evaluate the services provided by those fees and create an optional-fee system to keep from pricing potential students out of an education.

"It's definitely a time of fiscal responsibility here at K-State," said Mark Tomb, Student Governing Association Privilege Fee Committee chairman.

Tomb said the Privilege Fee Committee will be evaluating the services from the students' point of view to determine the quality of the service and how cuts can be made without sacrificing quality.

"Any time you make cuts, you have to make some hard choices and cut some services," Tomb said.

He said he thought the long-term benefits by far outweigh cuts in services provided.

He said Senate needed to trim the fat out of privilege fees and user fees could be the answer.

User fees would be paid only by those students who use the services, such as Lafene or the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"There are fees better suited to be optional than others," Tomb said. "It's kind of hard to do anything optional with the Union."

The fees best suited to become optional fees are those involving users who can be easily tracked. Lafene and the Rec Complex are obvious choices because users can be tracked and identified with their IDs.

It would be hard to track people who used the K-State Student Union. The only way to track them would be to set up turnstiles at the doors, and SGA has no intention of doing so.

With so many fees up for review this year, Tomb said he hopes to begin bringing them before Senate this fall instead of waiting until spring.

"I'd like to do at least one this fall," Tomb said.

The executive branch is also planning to attack the rising cost of education with the Access the Future program, which Jeff Peterson started during his first term as student body president.

Access the Future is a lobbying program that is attempting to keep the cost of tuition at the regents Universities low.

"This is a critical time for students at K-State," Peterson, student body president, said.

Tuition is increasing much faster than the inflation rate, and the state is forcing students to take on more of the financial burden for their education, he said.

"We are competitive academically," Peterson said. "We need to be competitive financially as well."

Peterson said he plans to take his message on the road again this fall.

"I think our most effective means was in going out to communities and talking to high-school government classes," he said.

For the campaign to be successful, the effort has to be statewide, Peterson said.

"That's what we plan to do," he said.

System for mail-in fee payments is long overdue

This system of fee payment would be much more agreeable for many students.

Mail-in fee payment has been delayed indefinitely.

Two years ago, K-State administrators promised the students fee payment by mail would be implemented. Now, according to Doug Ackley, assistant controller for the University, the students don't want it.

Mail-in fee payment fees would, for many students, end an hour of standing at Ahearn Field House in the hot sun or painfully cold winds. Students could instead send their tuition through the mail.

This system of fee payment would be much more agreeable for many students. It would especially be better for the two students who passed out because of the heat, among other reasons, during last week at fee payment.

But for those students who for whatever reason want or need to go through the agonizing process of going through Ahearn, that will still be available.

In fact, that process will probably be made easier because the students who opted to mail their checks won't be there.

Ackley said mail-in fee payment is used at the University of Kansas by two-thirds of the student body.

It seems that some KU students, at least, approve of the system.

But, Ackley said K-State students don't want this system. The administration has not done any surveys or polls of students to find out what they really want.

We're not saying we know what all students want, but we're saying that students need to have an opportunity to voice their opinions on the subject.

The administration should ask students before they decide they have read our minds. Put it on the ballot for the spring elections.

Columnist stumbles into unexpected generosity

KEVYN JACOBS

"Oh no. He's back."

I know that's what you're thinking.

"That faggot Jacobs with his weekly diatribes on homosexuals is writing for the Collegian again," you think. "He never writes about anything else. He needs to find some other topics to write about. Spare us the liberal queer philosophy already."

Or better yet, you are thinking, "I already know what Kevyn is going to write about, so I am not going to bother reading his column."

I know some of you out there are thinking this because many of you have told me so.

Hmmmmm... so you think you know me, eh? Well, dear reader, you are in for a surprise this semester. In addition to my regular fare of LesBiGayTrans issues, I have a few other hot-button topics bouncing around my brain that I'll probably spout off about this semester. But believe me, if my writing about homosexuality bothered you, then you sure aren't gonna like some of my other topics — they're bound not to fit in with your world view. And more than likely, I'll piss a few people off in the process — on the left and the right.

So, you've been warned — don't read any further if you don't like your assumptions about the world challenged.

OK, now that I've scared off the timid, the bored, and the excessively religious, this week I want to share with you a couple of miscellaneous (and benign) items.

Random Acts of Kindness

In a world that is ever-increasingly hostile and uncivil, it's always nice to be reminded that there are still good people out there. Last week, in the process of moving into the residence halls from my apartment on Fremont Street, I had one of those experiences that restore my faith in humanity.

While moving my belongings to the residence halls, I was walking through Aggieville, my arms laden with some of my few possessions. One of the shopping bags I was carrying chose an inconvenient moment (Is there ever a convenient one?) to rip open, spilling kitchen items all over the street.

Wearily, I gathered up my stuff as best as I could and trudged on up Moro Street, barely able to keep hold of everything. In fact, I had been forced to abandon some things along the sidewalk in Aggieville.

When I walked past Lair Gauche, the used audio, video and electronics store in Aggieville, one of the employees, Larry, saw my plight. Larry offered me the use of his store's wheeled cart in which to transport my stuff up to Haymaker Hall.

"You looked like you had your hands full," Larry told me.

Now mind you, I didn't know Larry and wasn't a customer of his store. I was just a stranger walking up the street who looked like he needed a helping hand — and Larry willingly provided it.

"This is Kansas," he explained, as if Kansas was some sort of magic word that implied civility, helpfulness and courtesy. Are we really so different out here in the center of the continent?

In any case, I am grateful to Larry for his help and his friendly attitude. I wish there were more people like him out there willing to extend a trusting hand to a stranger.

We in the media are often accused of only reporting the bad stuff that goes on in the world. That's why I just wanted to take this opportunity to share a little bit of the good stuff with you.

Naming the Names Redux

One of the parts of my column that I intend to continue this semester is the "Naming the Names" bit I close my column with each week.

For those of you who are new to K-State this semester, "Naming the Names" each week features a famous individual, contemporary or historical, who was openly lesbian, bisexual or gay, or who was known in their life to have been in intimate relationships (beyond friendships) with members of the same sex.

I think it's important that the lives of men who love men and women who love women not be whitewashed. Too often some of the most brilliant members of our species have been queer, but this aspect of their lives has been intentionally omitted from the historical record. It is my intention to make sure that homosexuality or bisexuality is not overlooked when praises are being sung to these fine people.

Last semester, some of my readers questioned the legitimacy of some of the names I named. Rest assured, I'm not outing anyone who doesn't want to be outed. On request, I can provide citations for every celebrity I name. Contact me at the Collegian, 116 Kedzie Hall, if you want to talk. Or feel free to e-mail me at: kevyn@ksu.edu.

This week's famous queer is:

U.S. Representative Gerry Studds, D-Mass. (1937- ).

Addressing consumer, tenant issues

Welcome back to campus.

You survived the heat and humidity of Ahearn Field House to pay your tuition and fees last week. You also started the process of consuming the most intangible consumer service, higher education.

SCOTT SMITH

Through this next academic year, you will purchase and consume many thousands of dollars of consumer items: housing, food, clothing and entertainment. Often, we, as students, feel that we are being taken advantage of by local and national businesses when we might not fully understand the real world and how it works.

We are in Manhattan to get our education, but we are also here to grow and mature as individuals. Part of this education is learning to make purchasing decisions without the guidance of our parents. This learning can be a very scary and eye-opening experience. But there is assistance available to you so that you are not burned during this learning period of your life.

The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs (formerly Consumer Relations Board) is located in the Office of Student Activities and Services. It was created in 1971 to provide the students of K-State assistance in resolving consumer and landlord-tenant problems.

This is a service paid for by student fees. In the past, this office has provided students advice on landlord-tenant problems, off-campus issues, roommate issues, auto repairs, mail-order fraud, door-to-door sales and much more. CTA also maintains listings of off-campus housing. A bulletin board listing this housing is located on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.

CTA is staffed by the director and by student interns. The student interns are concurrently taking a course in consumer affairs. The Director of CTA is selected through an application and interview process.

I chose to apply because of my desire to serve you, the student. I felt that with my past work experience as owner of a property management company and researcher for a law firm, I would be able to serve the students best through it.

CTA can offer students invaluable services. It will work to resolve complaints against businesses or landlords (local or out of town), provided that the student has made an attempt at resolution on their own. Seminars and fairs on consumer issues are held throughout the academic year and are open to students.

The office also maintains a library of information on the purchasing of products, such as credit, insurance, home security and utilities. This information is for the use of all students and is located in the office. Office staff can also help students investigate the reputation of businesses and landlords.

In the weeks to follow, I hope to address various consumer, landlord-tenant and roommate issues. If you have questions or issues you would like to see addressed in this column, feel free to contact me. I look forward at serving the students of K-State and wish you the best of luck during this semester.

The fall opinion page made simple

The fall semester traditionally ushers in a variety of changes. Changes of addresses, colors of foliage and possibly majors. A new semester also brings new personnel to editor's positions on the Collegian staff.

The opinion editorship is my first position on the Collegian. I came to K-State after doing a two-year stint at Hutchinson Community College, working on both their newspaper and magazine staffs. Being called up to the big leagues, from what could be comparatively called the minors in Hutchinson, might be what a optimistic person would call a challenge.

KEVIN KLASSEN

However, being the pessimist that I am, I am finding it to be somewhat overwhelming. But this will not deter me from having some fun with this page and trying to inject some new insight into what appears on it.

Readers will notice that some old favorites will appear in the ranks of the columnists this fall. Fans of Kevyn Jacobs, Brad Seabourn, Erin Mansur-Smith, Jeremy Stephens and Kady Guyton will be able to revel in their perspectives and ruminations.

Five new columnists will be gracing this page for reader approval. Scott Smith will keep us apprised of happenings in the office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs, while Jason Hamilton will offer his views of national and international affairs and a few that are closer to home. Other new faces in the opinion columns are Lach Franquemont and Justin Wild. The opinions expressed by the columnists do not mirror those of the entire Collegian staff.

However, the editorial in the upper left-hand corner is the opinion of the entire Collegian Editorial Board. It reflects the opinion of the majority of its members.

But no matter what cataclysmic ideas are expressed by these columnists, reader input is vital to the growth of this page. Fresh opinions and concepts expressed by our readers are necessary for the Collegian Editorial Board to accurately gauge the psyche of the K-State campus and to address the controversies that our readers feel are important.

So don't be shy about telling us what you think. Readers can contact me by e-mail at (kevkk@ksu.ksu.edu) or by several other means listed at the top of this page. I am eager to hear feedback from readers on any topic. Have a great year!

▶ FEE PAYMENT

Mail-in fee payment postponed due to computer problems

Sarah Lunday
campus editor

A year ago, K-State postponed mail-in fee payment until this year.

This year, mail-in fee payment did not take place.

What happened?

"That's a good question," Don Foster, University registrar, said.

Slow progress on the University's mail-in fee payment, or billing-receivable system, has been a setback, Foster said.

The internal computer processes within the cashiers office need to be refined before the mail-in fee payment takes place, Doug Ackley, assistant controller for the University, said.

The official University target date for installing mail-in fee payment, or the billing-receivable system, is spring 1997, Ackley said.

But a plethora of problems could stop the University from establishing mail-in fee payment, he said.

"It is delayed indefinitely," he said.

Setting up the electronic system that coordinates Perkins and Stafford loan payments with students' accounts has proved to be a costly, time-consuming endeavor.

"Money and time are just limiting us in what we can do," Ackley said.

The University has part of the electronic program collecting University charges, post receipts and generating bills in the basement of Farrell Library, Ackley said.

However, before the mail-in fee payment is established, K-State wants Pell and Stafford programs to be linked into the electronic system, Ackley said.

Also, establishing mail-in fee payment might not help students, he said.

"I'm not sure it's as much as an advantage as what students think it is," he said.

State law requires tuition or fees must be paid on or before the first day of classes. And to ensure that law would be met, K-State would probably require all students to pay a down-payment for fees by July 15 and the total payment by Aug. 1, Ackley said.

Even after establishing mail-in fee payment, some students would still have to participate in the arena fee-payment line at Ahearn Field House during the week before classes, he said.

Jennifer Cook, freshman in nutrition, said shortening the lines at Ahearn would be better than nothing.

"The lines are too long," she said.

Julie Pavlyak, senior in education, said the University system of fee-payment is pretty archaic.

"I don't think it's terrible the way we do it," Pavlyak said.

But Pavlyak did have to leave her vacation early to pay fees, and other students have to quit jobs and lose money to pay fees, she said.

Dave Christensen, sophomore in pre-medicine and biology, said the long lines in Ahearn can cause confusion for a first-year student who is not familiar with the system.

However, the long lines at Ahearn might not have an end.

"At this point in time, it's not the most advantageous thing for the University to do," Ackley said.

▶ K-STATE UNION

Beer in Union gets mixed responses

Mary Emerson
staff writer

Beer is now available in the K-State Student Union.

"This is the first time. It's history," said Terri Eddy, manager of the Union recreation department.

Union Station offers six kinds of bottled beer including Zima, Budweiser, Bud Light, Coors Light, Miller Lite and Miller Genuine Draft. Zima will cost $2.30, and the others will cost $1.75.

Teto Henderson, manager of Union Station, said 3.2-percent wine coolers might be added later in the year depending on sales.

The Union began selling beer two weeks before classes started and offers 16-ounce Bud and Bud Light drafts for $1.50, Eddy said.

The Union Governing Board decided in spring 1995 to allow 3.2-percent beer to be sold at Union Station and the recreation area.

"It has been a surprise for students," Eddy said.

Student response to the beer sales has been varied.

"I didn't know about it, but I think it's fine as long as students use it responsibly and don't take advantage of it," Lindsey Carney, freshman undecided, said.

Other students agreed with Carney.

"I don't see much wrong with it as long as they are checking IDs and making sure people are 21," Jason Orme, sophomore in accounting, said. "I think it's good if it raises money for the Union."

Tamara Weiss, graduate student in Spanish, said she was aware of the decision and thinks it is a good idea.

"I think the Union will make quite a bit of money off of it. It will draw people in, especially to the recreation center. That's what people like to do — play pool and drink beer," she said.

Some people disagree with the decision to allow alcohol in the Union.

"Everyone sells beer. Selling beer in the Union encourages people to drink, and beer companies target college students. This is not good," said Kerwin Nygren, director of Chi Alpha Christian Fellowship.

Raising money for the Union is an important reason for beer to be sold, but the main reason is that students asked for it, Henderson said.

"The students voted for it, and we are here to serve them," he said.

Both Union Station and the recreation center will follow Kansas laws for selling alcohol. IDs will be checked, beer cannot leave the area it is purchased in and only one beer can be bought at a time.

Limits on the number of beers students can purchase and consume in one evening will not be set, Henderson said.

"We have to comply with all state laws just like any bar. If we don't, we can be fined or shut down," Henderson said. "Although we will not do anything that is not required by law."

Both Henderson and Eddy said they don't believe the beer will become a problem, and they do not know if it will make much of a difference to the Union.

"It'll be interesting to see what happens, but I don't know what to expect. Our hope is that we don't have to add too much labor to keep control of it. I think it will help the bowling leagues," Eddy said.

"If students want to get drunk, they'll continue to go to Aggieville, but if they want to play a game of pool or bowl, they'll come here," she said. "I don't think they want the Union to have a bar atmosphere."

A whole new sports page

The Wildcat Watch is dead. Long live the Wildcat Watch.

Beginning this fall, the Collegian will be collaborating with Midwest Sports Publications out of Wichita to bring Cat fans a new K-State sports publication. This new magazine, called Purple Pride, will provide a weekly look at fall sports at K-State, switching to a biweekly publication in the spring.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

The Collegian staff will provide much of the writing and photography for Purple Pride, and Student Publications Inc. will receive a share of both subscription and newsstand revenue. Available at newsstands for $1.95, students will be able to purchase Purple Pride at the reduced rate of $1.25.

Purple Pride will be edited by former Collegian sports editor and 1986 K-State graduate Tim Fitzgerald. "Fitz" will work closely with Collegian assistant sports editor Todd Stewart to develop story ideas and bring them to life. Purple Pride's production editor Margo Keller edited the 1991 Royal Purple while she was a student at K-State.

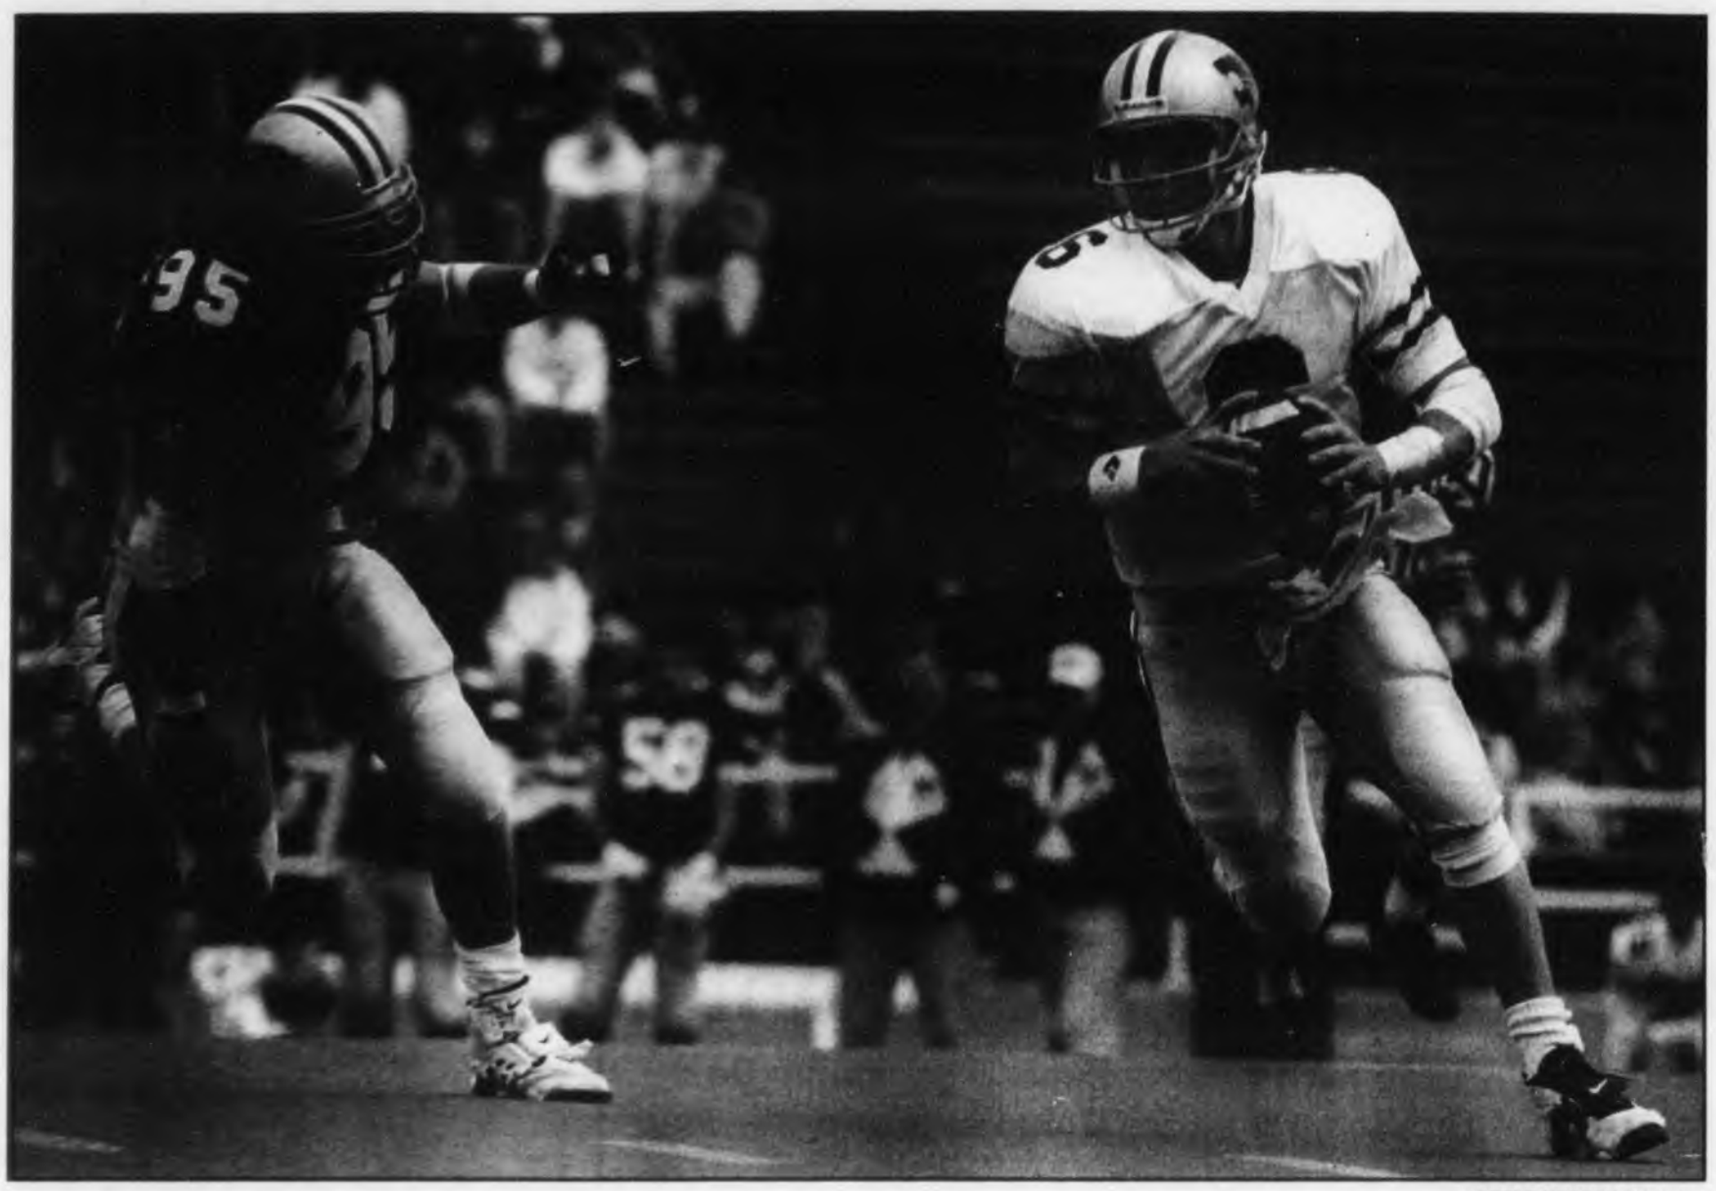
What does this mean for the Collegian sports page? It simply means we will have more room to cover the sports scene at K-State. Much of this increased coverage will be devoted to non-revenue and club sports.

In our early issues, we will bring you complete reviews of K-State's fall sports teams, including a position-by-position breakdown of Wildcat football. This week, we'll review the offense, with defense and special teams coming next week.

Because most K-State sporting events take place over the weekend, Monday's will be devoted primarily to game coverage. Our reporters will tell you not only what happened, but why it happened, focusing on analysis of the game. Additionally, Monday's will bring the first of four weekly sports columns, offering more analysis of the weekend's events.

Tuesday's will focus on sports club activity. We will run a feature story and/or game coverage from one of the more than 20 registered sports clubs at K-State. We also hope to provide results from all sports club competition in the previous week.

Wednesday's page will be devoted to feature stories and interviews. Through these in-depth looks at the athletes themselves, we hope to bring K-State athletics off the playing field and into your home. We will also offer coverage of coaches' mid-week press conferences.



Thursdays are your chance to be heard through letters to the sports editor. Think one of our columnists is way off base? Think Iowa State will sweep Big Eight football? Let us know.

You will also see coverage of mid-week contests — Wednesday night volleyball matches, for example.

Friday, our writers will predict the winners of the weekend's Big Eight and selected other matchups. The bulk of the page, however, will be devoted to giving you an accurate and thorough preview of the coming weekend's events.

If you have questions or comments, you can bring them to the Collegian in 116 Kedzie Hall addressed to the sports editor, or e-mail us. Dan's address is baxoje@ksuvm.ksu.edu; Todd's address is toddvs@ksu.ksu.edu.

Quarterback Matt Miller evades the defense at the K-State spring game last April. Miller will be the starting quarterback for the Cats home opener September 2 against Temple.

Opportunity knocks

■ Quarterbacks prepared for life after Chad May

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

A year on the sidelines as a transfer. Another playing back-up. Finally, Matt Miller realizes why he transferred to K-State.

"I thank God I chose to come to Kansas State," Miller said of his 1993 transfer from Texas A&M. "Coach Snyder has given me the opportunity, and I thank God for helping him give me that opportunity."

Miller's opportunity is the No. 1 quarterback spot.

After serving a year in the backup role, the reins have been handed over to Miller, but Miller said he has realistic goals about following in the footsteps of his predecessor.

"A lot of people have asked me about replacing Chad, but I don't look at it as replacing Chad. I'm the starting quarterback at Kansas State. I can't be another Chad May," Miller said. "I'm going to go out there and be Matt Miller and do everything I can to help this team put a lot of points on the board."

The receivers on the other end of Miller's passes should help the Cats put points on the board.

The Cats return three of the most highly-touted receivers in the nation in junior Kevin Lockett and seniors Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running.

Lockett, who last season became the quickest receiver in Big Eight history to surpass 1,000 yards, said even with Miller's slower release, Miller does some other things that can put the Cats in position to win.

"People are saying there will be a drop off back there with Matt," Lockett said. "But he'll do some different things to make the plays."

Coach Bill Snyder said he has seen in practices that Miller has the ability to make the big plays.

"Matt Miller, during the course of the spring, improved 14 out of 15 days. He's impressed all of us," Snyder said.

"I think our players were impressed with the things Matt did, and I know the coaches were."

Snyder also said he was impressed with the progress made by Miller's backup, junior Brian Kavanagh.

Kavanaugh, who spent last season as the third-string quarterback behind May and Miller, will return to the backup spot he had his freshman year behind May.

But what could be the wild card in the quarterbacking spot is junior college All-American Cody Lee Smith. Smith, who has been battling a stomach virus, could factor into the mix later in the season should Miller falter.

For now, however, the job is Miller's to lose and he's excited about his chance on the field.

"We've got the exact same play book as we did last year, but we've got the ability to do a lot of other things. It's going to be an exciting offense," Miller said.

"People are going to like to watch us play."

With talented people all around Miller, he said he knows exactly what his role will be.

"My entire supporting cast is great. All I've got to do is direct the ship, and those guys will make the plays happen. I just have to make sure I don't make the big play that gets us hurt."

> "I think our players were impressed with the things Matt (Miller) did, and I know the coaches were."

> BILL SNYDER
> K-STATE FOOTBALL COACH

Snyder has been working with Miller on just that, and Miller said he could see progress.

"I think I just improved overall in every facet of the game," Miller said.

"Coach Snyder worked with me a lot, and we watched a lot of film.

"I think he's one of the best in the nation in developing quarterbacks, and he's done everything he can to help me develop," Miller said.

"I've been looking forward to this my entire life," he said.

"I've always wanted to be a starting quarterback at the Division I level.

"I'm going to give it my best shot."

Snyder prepares for a new football season

It's a short 12 days until K-State will open its final season of play in the Big Eight Conference, and Wildcat coach Bill Snyder is ready for his Cats to take the field and erase the haunting memories of last year's dismal showing in the Aloha Bowl.

"It lingered 227 days, which is what today is from Dec. 25," Snyder said Aug. 9. "I think we learned some lessons and took some things for granted, but it's behind us now. We learned from our mistakes."

Snyder said although the Cats learned a lot from the 12-7 loss to Boston College, a win could have done even more for this year's team.

"I felt that if we had gotten over the hump on Dec. 25, I would state unequivocally that we were an improved football team," Snyder said.

But for now, Snyder said, the most important thing for the Cats is to put the Aloha Bowl behind them.

"We can't linger on that, and if we do, it's going to cost us somewhere down the road," he said. "The only important thing is we learn from it and understand where we might have gone in the wrong direction and get it corrected, and I think we did that."

Much of Snyder's attention in 1995 will be focused on his quarterback spot because of the departure of two-year starter Chad May.

For now, Snyder has handed the reins over to senior Matt Miller, and he said people should not worry about a drop off between the two quarterbacks.

Snyder also said not to overlook the personnel changes at other key positions.

"We still have some questions to answer. Matt hasn't had a great deal of experience, and the same will hold true at the offense tackle spots because of the turnover we had at those spots and our specialty teams," Snyder said.

The depth of this year's Cats will help Snyder compensate for the losses.

"If you take all of the positions and laid them out, I think I would say, yes, we are collectively deeper and more talented," Snyder said.

After last season's 9-3 campaign, Snyder said success for the Cats will not be measured in wins but in quality play.

"Seven wins wouldn't be a bad year," Snyder said. "I can live with anything as long as I know our players and coaches are doing their very best."

▶ CAMPUS CONSTRUCTION

Rec construction to be completed within one month

Sarah Lunday
campus editor

Construction at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, which was slated for completion in late June, is behind schedule.

"Within the next month, I would hope that everything is pretty well completed," Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, said.

Flooring difficulties within the building have delayed Sports Unlimited, a construction company based in Oklahoma City, said Derek Walters, assistant director and facility manager at the Rec Complex.

Robel said slight imperfections were sighted in the small gym's flooring in early June, and the floor will be refinished.

"I think it was the first time they had done a floor like this in the United States," Walters said.

The company experienced difficulties getting supplies and construction materials throughout the construction period, Walters said.

Construction on the main gym's flooring is expected to be finished in one to two weeks, he said.

A new mall track, which is bigger than the indoor track already in place at the Rec Complex, is scheduled for completion in 2-1/2 weeks, he said.

Other areas of construction in the building include resurfacing the floors in the racquetball courts, constructing a resource room, and turning the old weight room into a table tennis room.

The Rec Complex is offering a sports-resource center to students where they can receive fitness counseling from computers, check their blood pressure and use it as an overall wellness-resource area, Robel said.

The sports-resource center is not completed, but it will grow each semester and offer more resources to students as they become available.

"We'll start out with some limited hours and build from there," he said.

Student accessibility to equipment at the Rec Complex will not be hindered during the next few weeks, Walters said.

Extra staff will be on hand at the Rec Complex to give new students help finding their way around and getting to know the equipment, he said.

Aaron DeJoia, building supervisor at the Rec Complex, said the construction shouldn't slow people down that much.

"From what I've seen out here so far, there's hardly any waiting now," DeJoia, a junior in agronomy, said. "And it still shouldn't be bad with all the students coming back."

For instance, the Rec Complex now stocks 15 to 20 stair climbers, which are some of the most popular pieces of equipment, and there are no lines, DeJoia said.

Although construction is not complete, accessibility to equipment has not been that limited, Walters said.

▶ CITY CONSTRUCTION

Construction a familiar sight in Manhattan

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Orange barrels have been part of the scenery in Manhattan all summer and will continue to be into the spring.

"We've called ourselves the orange-barrel city, and we're not done yet," Jerry Petty, city engineer, said.

Construction on Frontage Road in front of Wal-Mart will continue into the winter months as new phases begin.

"All the businesses are accessible, but some are trickier to get to than others," Petty said.

Two phases of the construction on Frontage Road were completed this summer. The resurfacing project is being completed by the city.

The Kansas Department of Transportation will begin construction in the area around Oct. 1, Petty said.

Two intersections will be built from Frontage Road to Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

Leavenworth Street will be extended to Frontage Road, Terry Grote, area construction manager for KDOT, said.

A second intersection will be added on McCall Road between Harding Glass and Ace Hardware. The existing curve will remain intact, but McCall Road will be extended to create another intersection.

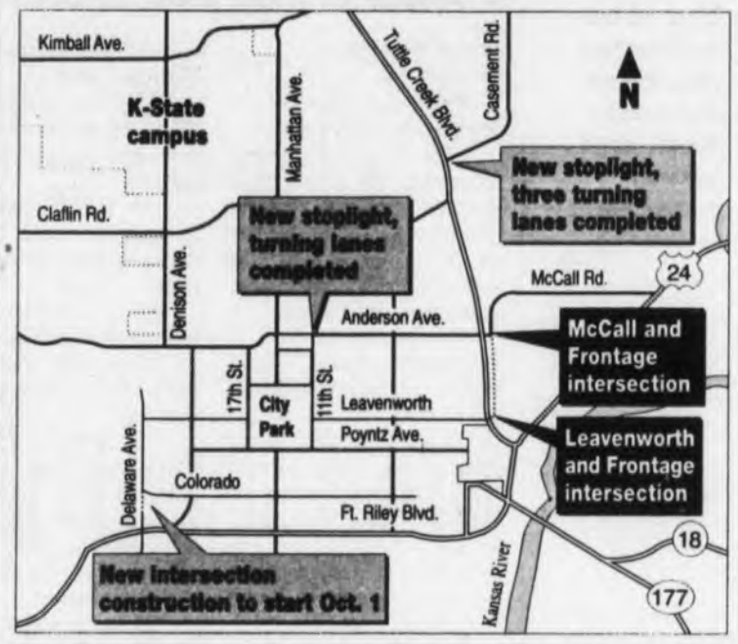
With the Leavenworth addition, Taco Tico and the Panda Paradise Restaurant will be taken out. The entrance to Frontage Road by Village Inn will be taken out during the construction.

"We have let the bids on the Leavenworth and McCall projects," Grote said.

He said he expects construction to begin in the next 30 to 60 days.

Two of the city's other construction projects have been completed. A new stoplight and turning lanes have been added at 11th Street and Bluemont Avenue, and at Casement Road and Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

Left-turn lanes were added on Bluemont and on 11th Street. There is also a left-turn signal on 11th Street.



A left-turn lane was improved for the southbound lane of Tuttle Creek Boulevard at the Casement Road intersection. A new stoplight has also been added.

Petty said he expects construction to begin around Oct. 1 on the Fort Riley Boulevard and Delaware Avenue intersection. Left-turn lanes will be installed on Fort Riley Boulevard, and 1,000 feet of new pavement will be laid.

Petty said students can expect the annual street-maintenance crews to be out on the side streets for another couple of weeks. The projects should provide only temporary inconveniences, he said.

Making way for construction

Taco Tico and Panda Paradise will be torn down to make way for Frontage Road east of Tuttle Creek Boulevard. The entrance to Village Inn will also change during construction. Here are some construction areas in Manhattan.

What a difference a change of scenery can make.

After having the picnic sponsored by Ford and Haymaker halls at Tuttle Creek State Park for the past six years, this year it was moved to the recreation area across from Haymaker.

"We decided to move it for several reasons," Brad Ratliff, president of Haymaker, said.

"Most freshmen don't even know where Tuttle Creek is at, and many of them don't even have cars," he said.

"This way, they can just walk across the street and be at the picnic."

About 300 students from all the residence halls made the trek across the street to listen to music, eat hamburgers and play in the sun on Saturday.

"I think that it's cooler since it's by the dorms," Carrie Agler, junior in pre-pharmacy, said.

"This way, people from all of the dorms see us out here, and they just join in," she said.

Josh Ratliff, sophomore in business, said he also thinks the move was a good idea.

"It's a lot better than it was last year," he said.

"It's so close that people can't have an excuse not to show up."

Gift certificates and T-shirts were given away in drawings at the picnic, but the main reason people said they were out there was to relieve some stress before hitting the books.

"We can now get out and relax before the work starts," Brad Ratliff said.

"You work hard all summer doing other things, and this is really the only time that you will have to play before hitting the books," he said.

For many people, attending the picnic gave them an opportunity to meet their new neighbors.

"At the picnic, they have a chance to meet with some of the people on their floor or from other dorms," Brad Ratliff said.

"It's just another way to get people more acquainted."

Most of the activity at the picnic was centered around the sand volleyball court, where two teams battled it out for more than two hours.

Other students played catch with flying discs and footballs.

Then again, others said there was something missing from the picnic.

"Last year they had a water slide," Justin Moore, sophomore in nutrition, said.

"That was really fun," he said. "I guess they aren't having it this year. That's too bad."

About 300 students from all of the residence halls participated in the picnic, which took place across from Haymaker Hall. Here, students congregate before deciding teams for a football game.

▶ UNABOMER

Bombs don't worry faculty

Mary Emerson
staff writer

Because of the growing notoriety of the Unabomer, many businesses and universities are taking extra precautions with mail services.

Despite the suspected bomb found in Nichols Hall on Aug. 14, which turned out to be fake, it was business as usual for K-State.

The Unabomer has frequently targeted mail bombs toward faculty at universities.

His reasoning, according to the manifesto he wrote and sent to the Washington Post and the New York Times, is that he does not like technology and modernization. He wrote that people like professors are responsible for modernization.

Members of faculty at K-State do not seem to be too worried.

Joseph Merklin, professor of nuclear engineering, said he never thinks about it.

"I don't worry about it, but I can't speak for anyone else. I don't consider myself prominent enough to be targeted by someone like the Unabomer. When I get a package, I rip it open," Larry Williams, associate professor of biology, said.

K-State Central Mail Services has been cautious and looked for unusual packages for years, Connie Moseler, Mail Services office supervisor, said.

"Mail Services has, and has had for several years, a description of what to look for in mail bombs," she said.

"Also, campus police came out a few weeks ago and talked to us about what to look for."

A bomb description list is provided by the FBI for all post offices. It contains things to look for such as mailings from foreign countries, badly typed addresses, misspelled words, strong odors, protruding wires and oil stains on the wrapper.

"The key to it all is to look for unusual things. Oftentimes you can actually feel wires inside the package," Capt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police said.

Although there is one central mail service on campus, each building processes its own mail and should be aware of the kinds of packages that go through the system.

SPEAKER

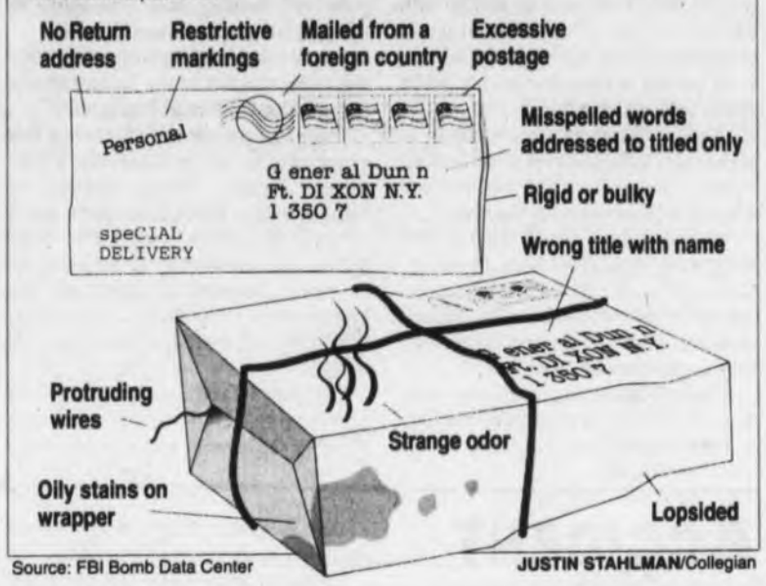
▶ To arrange a program on mail bombs with K-State Police, contact Capt. Charles Beckom at 532-1137.

"Up at Central Mail, we don't get a lot of unusual mail. The bulk of the mail goes to the buildings. The important thing for people on campus to know is that all buildings get and sort their own mail. They need to be cautious," Moseler said.

The campus police department is willing to visit departments and talk to them about what to look for and watch out for while processing mail.

Beckom is responsible for giving programs about bombs to departments on campus.

"We try to tailor the program to the specific group. We go through and review what is in the guide. The postal services are unique because when explosives are sent out, the mail services are used as a carrier and not the target," Beckom said.



"For the person in an office in the case of the letter bomber, the receipt of a manuscript or letter from someone you don't know or wrapped in an unusual way, I would be leery of those, especially for those working in education, computer industry and business administration," he said.

Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said the department has not changed its policy toward bombs and bomb threats.

"I don't think we've changed our policy at all because of the Unabomber. Other people have become more aware, but we still don't have that many reports," he said.

Mail bomb characteristics

Mail bombs are difficult to detect because they look like normal letters or packages. However, the FBI Bomb Data Center has compiled a list of characteristics many mail bombs possess.

MARLATT

can't really get involved in dorm activities. Not that we can't do things with Marlatt, it's just that you're not going to be part of this hall. It would be nice to be getting to know the people I'll be living with all year."

Angie Clevenger, sophomore in elementary education, is a resident on Marlatt's fourth floor and said she hasn't seen a lot of men on the floor.

"We don't have a staff, but they said we can call them if we need anything," Clevenger said. "We had a floor meeting, and a lot of the hall staff came and said that if we felt we needed escorts, they would provide them."

Chris Webster, second-year resident of Marlatt, said he likes the idea of female residents.

"I didn't find out about the women until Sunday when I got here. Everybody I talked to likes the idea; it's nice to see different faces in Marlatt," Webster, sophomore in computer engineering, said. "We'd like to see Marlatt go permanently coed."

Moore and Ford halls are also opening terrace rooms in the basements for the overflow of female residents.

"We had students living there a few years ago, so it's not entirely a new thing," Bridget Porter, director of Moore, said. "Of course, there are a lot of perks about living there. They are closer in proximity to the computer rooms, laundry facilities and our kitchenettes. They also have a closed-off lobby, so there's a lot of convenience."

Kristina Davis, sophomore in architectural engineering, said she chose a basement room over being separated from her roommate.

"We signed up to room together, and things got all mixed up, and we were spread out," Davis said. "They said the only way to room together is to move into the basement — guess that's all they had left."

One structural difference in the newly reopened basement rooms is the large air-conditioning pipes.

"We are going to have trouble putting up a loft because it hangs so low. We will try to work around it and put the bed lower," Davis said.

Living in a basement is not as bad as it sounds, she said.

"The word basement just kind of carries a vibe, but once we moved in, it was cool," Davis said. "At first, there were just a lot of bugs. We're right next to the trash room, but they've sprayed twice, so it's better than it would be."

ACCIDENT

could have been a child. It could have been a bicycle there instead of a pick-up."

The accident occurred at about 3:30 p.m. on a school day in a residential area. The corner of 11th and Yuma streets is within five blocks of four schools.

McAdams' attorney, Steven Opat, said McAdams' statement said that he did look before he made the turn, and McAdams' actions did not constitute reckless disregard for others safety as required by the definition of reckless driving.

The original charges had also alleged McAdams was driving under the influence at the time of the accident because a drug test done on the day of the accident came back positive for marijuana.

Wheeler said it was standard procedure to give a drug test to a driver involved in this type of accident.

Wheeler testified he thought at the time of the accident that drugs could have been a factor, but he did not give McAdams a field sobriety test at the scene of the accident, search him or notice any physical signs that might have indicated McAdams was under the influence of drugs.

Wheeler said his suspicions were aroused by McAdams' apparently flat emotional state.

"When I first talked to him, he showed very little emotional response, if any," Wheeler said.

The judge said the drug test alone was not sufficient evidence to support the DUI charges because a drug test can only determine whether a person has used marijuana within the last 30 days and not whether the person was under the influence at the time of the test.

He said McAdams' flat behavior could have been caused by shock, and more evidence of physical impairment was required to prove McAdams was under the influence.

McAdams had been under a court order to submit to regular drug tests, but the judge rescinded that order.

Peters said the ambiguity of the reckless driving and DUI statutes as they pertain to drugs has made this case hard to prosecute.

PAYMENT

All available University fans were at Ahearn throughout fee payment, Don Foster, University registrar, said. And an emergency medical technician was also available at Ahearn, he said.

Exhaust fans operated at night, and floor fans operated during the day, he said.

"Ahearn is a difficult building to move air through," Foster said.

The heat inside Ahearn during fee payment is a concern for the University, he said.

Foster is working with the University cashiers office and Student Financial Assistance to make fee payment easier, he said. Their long-term goal is to implement mail-in fee payment.

However, students might have to deal with the heat next year as well, Foster said.

Students had mixed feelings about the heat in Ahearn.

Amy Donahy, sophomore in pre-medicine and English, paid fees before lunch Wednesday and was not affected by the heat. Donahy said she didn't even remember the heat being that bad.

Carrie Collett, sophomore in secondary education and history, who was working outside Ahearn at a telecommunications booth, said she heard a lot of complaints from people about the conditions inside Ahearn as they came out.

DIRECTOR

Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, said he was pleased K-State could attract a candidate with leadership experience at other campus unions and who is the president-elect of the Association of College Unions-International.

"The renovation and expansion project will have a high priority," Bosco said, "but I think he will take quality time to listen to us, students and others to develop a vision for the building."

"I think he has demonstrated the ability to listen to others," he said.

Pitts has worked on a recent renovation project at the Iowa State union, which has many of the same components the K-State Union enhancement will have.

The Iowa State Union has explored branding and has plans for a food court and a student activities office.

"We need to create a comfortable environment and enhance programming to make the K-State Union the type of facility and have the type of programs that students like and will participate in," Pitts said.

The $9-million enhancement project is scheduled to begin in late spring.

Patrick Carney, Union Program Council president and member of the Union Director Selection Committee, said he thought Pitts was qualified and would be a good Union director.

Pitts has been an adviser for both union programming and student government groups at Iowa State.

He said he advocates outreach and thought students should have input in the running and renovation of the Union.

Pitts said he would like to organize focus groups to obtain input from students on campus.

"I believe students should have a significant role in the Union," Pitts said. "The No. 1 patrons of the Union are students, and they should be assigned a role in program design."

Iowa Republican poll shows Gramm, Dole tied

Dana Harding
staff writer

AMES, Iowa — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, declared his tie with Senate Majority Leader, Bob Dole, R-Kan., a campaign victory at the Iowa Republican Straw Poll in Ames, Iowa, on Saturday.

All the Republican presidential candidates attended the event. Dole and Gramm tied for first with 2,582 votes each. Pat Buchanan came in third with 1,922 votes and Lamar Alexander placed fourth with 1,156 votes.

In the past, the results of both the Iowa and New Hampshire straw polls have been strong indicators of who will receive the Republican nomination for president.

The Iowa Republican Straw Poll is a fundraising event for the candidate who receives the Republican nomination for president. It is conducted every four years in Ames by Republicans.

Already, the Iowa Republicans have raised $250,000 for the Republican party.

Participants from any state could vote in the straw poll and attend the evening speeches after making a $25 contribution.

The afternoon began with a pep rally for each candidate. It included an informal speech and time to visit with the candidate.

Dan Quayle, former vice president, was the master of ceremonies. His opening speech was a crowd pleaser.

"We first need to fill the vacancy in the White House. The vacancy in character and competence. Our country needs moral leadership," Quayle said.

The event has faced controversy the past few weeks. Candidates have been accused of organizing bus loads of supporters from their home states to influence the results of the poll.

Republican Arlen Specter spoke out against the poll, saying it was a phony because people other than Iowans were invited and allowed to participate in the vote.

When Specter stepped out on the platform to give his speech, he was booed by the crowd of nearly 10,000.

Dole was predicted to win the poll by a landslide. The results stunned both the crowd and candidates.

"I feel that this is the first victory of many to come for the campaign, and I look forward to beating Bob Dole," Gramm said.

Former city manager files lawsuit

■ Pearson alleges city discriminated against age

Cori Cornelison
staff writer

The national search for a new city manager is continuing as planned despite a discrimination complaint filed by the former city manager.

Jim Pearson, former city manager, filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission Aug. 7 alleging he was terminated because of his age and a physical disability.

Pearson, 53, has had prosthetic legs below both of his knees for 10 years because of a congenital arteriole defect.

"I believe I was hired in part due to having a disability, and I believe I was fired in part due to my disability," Pearson said. "I was evaluated before I was terminated, and some of the comments from the commissioners led me to believe I was too old for the job."

Mayor Edith Stunkel and commissioners Sydney Carlin and Steve Hall voted against renewing Pearson's contract in April in a 3-2 vote after holding seven executive sessions concerning his contract.

Pearson received no reasons as to why his contract would not be renewed at the time of his termination in April.

Pearson had been city manager for three years before his termination. Prior to his city manager position, he was assistant city manager for 14 years. He received his prosthetic legs while he was assistant city manager.

While he was city manager, Pearson said the city's compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act was one of his primary responsibilities.

He was a witness for the city in a 1994 lawsuit filed by a resident of Manhattan who charged that the city had not complied with ADA requirements.

Pearson said he is doing some private consulting work, but he is still looking for a permanent position.

Stunkel refused to comment on Pearson's termination and referred further information dealing with the complaint to be obtained through a city attorney, David Stutzman.

Stutzman said the commissioners have not yet had an executive session about the complaint and said he didn't know if or when there would be one.

He said the next step the commissioners will take is to file a response with the Human Rights Commission, and if the parties do not agree, there will be an investigation into the complaint.

The search for a new city manager is expected to be completed by the end of September, Ron Fehr, acting city manager, said.

The PAR Group of Chicago has been hired by the city to help with candidate recruitment and the screening process.

He said city commissioners have scheduled an executive section on Aug. 29 to meet for screening applicants to form an interview pool, and interviews will be Sept. 8-11.

As of the beginning of August, more than 300 applications had been received for the city manager position.

Who's Who at Rec Services

Shane Fairchild, native of Quinter, Kansas has been employed as Outdoor Rental Center Manager for three years. Fairchild, senior in radio/TV, enjoys the flexible hours, staff and environment at Recreational Services. "I have enjoyed working with different people," he said. In addition to working at the Outdoor Rental Center, Shane is employed with the Educational Communication Center (ECC) Production Crew. His hobbies include screen writing and watching movies. Upon graduation, Shane plans to move to Hollywood and work for a production company.

Kristin Jackson, is a senior in early childhood education from Pocahontas, Iowa. She has been employed as a Weight/Fitness Area Supervisor since May. She enjoys experimenting with the new fitness machines, meeting people and learning how to use the machines correctly. "My experience at the Recreation Complex has taught me to be considerate with coworkers and the public," she said. Her hobbies include various sports, working out and spending time with her friends. In the future, Jackson would like to find a teaching and volleyball coaching job in the Manhattan area.

INTRAMURAL MANIA

The Intramural program offers a wide variety of individual and team sports. We invite all students, faculty and staff to participate. It's a great way to meet people, have fun and stay fit!

FALL SPORTS BEGIN

The first intramural entry week is August 21-25. During that week, entries will be accepted in the Recreational Services office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. for the following sports:

- Flag Football
- Soccer
- 3-Wall Handball Singles
- 3-Wall Racquetball Singles
- Horseshoes Singles
- Tennis Singles
- Badminton Singles
- Doubles Volleyball
- 1 on 1 Basketball

An entry fee is charged for each Intramural activity. Team sports are charged $10 per team and Individual Sports are $1 per person. A yearly team fee is also available. All Intramural fees are subject to sales tax.

NEW THIS YEAR

- Teams with a winning percentage of .500 or better will advance to playoffs.
- New activities this year will be Punt Pass & Kick, Miniature Golf and Home Run Derby.

CAPTAINS'/MANAGERS' MEETING

Four times during the year Captains'/Managers' Meetings are held. These meetings are held after the entry deadline and schedules will be distributed at this meeting only. Make sure your team is represented to avoid being put on Intramural Probation.

Captains'/Managers' Meeting
Tuesday, August 29
Union Forum Hall
5 p.m.

Nutrition Notes

Slow down. The faster you eat, the more you eat. The human brain requires 20 minutes to register satiety, so the slower you eat, the less food you require to feel full. Fill up on low-fat foods first in order to keep your level of fat and caloric consumption down (Bryant & Peterson, 1995).

Save 25%

If you purchase a yearly facility use card before the end of August, you will receive a 25% savings off the monthly price. We accept Mastercard and Visa.

CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

Progress continues and we really are getting closer to completion even though it seems that it is taking forever. In the major category, the flooring people will still be around when classes begin. From there, most items are the smaller things such as touch up, clean up, hang wall pads, some electrical work, etc. Landscaping has started and grass will be growing soon to help pretty up the outside.

Outdoor Rental Open

The Outdoor Rental Center is open for your canoeing and camping needs. We have a full line of tents, canoes, sleeping bags, backpacks, stoves, lanterns, etc., and our rates are very reasonable. Give us a call at 532-6894 for your equipment needs!

Rec Check

Rec Check provides program and facility information 24 hours a day by dialing 532-6000. Call Rec Check for Rec Complex and Pool hours, exercise sessions, Intramural deadlines and more!

Entry Policies:

- Facility users must be affiliated with KSU - student, faculty/staff or Alumni Association member.
- Cards are not sold to the general public.
- Call the Recreational Services office at 532-6980 for details.

Fitness Facts

Something to think about. Many famous thinkers believed exercise got the creative juices flowing. Aristotle, for example, walked up and down the pathways of the Lyceum in Athens as he lectured to students because he believed exercise made the mind more lucid (Bryant & Peterson, 1995). Walking now may develop a program of exercise for a lifetime. Walking a mile burns only about 10 to 20 percent fewer calories than jogging a mile. Walking briskly can get nearly the same aerobic benefits of running (Editors of the University of California, Berkeley Wellness Letter, 1991). So think about it, exercise may keep you mentally and physically on your toes.

Summer rewind

While you were at home soaking up the rays and working, life went on in Manhattan. Tuition rose, Jesse James' remains came to K-State and the University got a new logo.

The University of Washington's solar car pulls onto the shoulder of U.S. Highway 24 to allow traffic to pass during Sunrayce 95. The solar cars in the race from Indianapolis to Golden, Colo., averaged a speed of 15 to 30 mph.

Michael Finnegan, professor of anthropology, uses a light table to look over x-rays. Finnegan used a similar method for investigating the possible remains of Jesse James.

CAMPUS

Tuition to increase

Students attending any of the six Kansas regents universities should start saving up a little extra tuition money.

The Kansas Board of Regents voted to increase tuition at all of its member universities in fiscal year 1997, which begins July 1, 1996, at the June 29 meeting.

A general operating increase of 3 percent will be added at each of the schools, with K-State and the University of Kansas adding another 3 percent to cover the costs of converting to linear tuition in fall 1996.

The 6-percent total increase will bring resident undergraduate tuition at K-State and KU to $883 and resident graduate tuition to $1,059 for 1996-97, according to materials distributed at the board meeting.

Nonresident undergraduates will pay $3,742, while out-of-state graduate students will pay $3,498.

These numbers reflect the amounts paid by students enrolled in 15 hours with the linear-tuition system.

With linear tuition, students will pay for each credit hour taken instead of paying a flat fee for the minimum number of hours.

Students in the College of Veterinary Medicine, College of Technology at K-State-Salina and the KU School of Medicine will only pay the 3-percent operating increase.

Jesse James' remains examined

The presumed remains of the outlaw Jesse James were examined this summer at K-State for identification.

Legend has it that James was shot and killed in 1882 while dusting or straightening a picture.

The body thought to be that of James was exhumed this summer by scientists, researchers and archaeologists.

Scientists and researchers are using fragments of bone and teeth to determine the true identity of the body buried at Mount Olivet Cemetery in Kearney, Mo.

Michael Finnegan, K-State anthropology professor, returned to K-State with skeletal remains of the exhumed body to conduct tests and identification examinations.

Students design new logo

K-State has a new, more aggressive-looking logo.

But it will not replace the four current logos, said John Fairman, vice president for institutional advancement.

The new logo features a different Wildcat than those of the past, he said.

The need for a new logo was the result of the recent success of K-State's football team. The demand for K-State products has increased.

Art students worked on the project during the spring 1995 semester, Fairman said.

Racers harness sun power

Forty teams from across the continent raced more than 1,000 miles in cars powered by the sun.

Sunrayce 95, the largest solar-powered car race in North America, made a stop in Manhattan in June.

The cars were designed and built by college students and completely powered by the sun.

Although all of the cars in the race are of original design and build, they all operate in the same manner.

The solar energy is converted directly to electricity by the photovoltaic panels on the top of the cars.

This electricity is stored in batteries inside the car, or the electricity can go directly to the motor while the car is running.

OFF CAMPUS

Native American artifacts found

A new archaeological site at Fort Riley might help reveal how Native Americans lived before European settlement.

Archaeologists at Fort Riley this summer unearthed the remains of a civilization of people who lived in Kansas more than 400 years ago.

The artifacts found at the site pre-date any settlement or exploration of the continent by Europeans, said Lynn Richardson, archaeologist from the University of Illinois.

The site pre-dates any known tribes, but John Dendy, Fort Riley archaeologist for cultural resources, said the living style of the people is similar to Pawnee tribes.

Heavy rains wash out road

Heavy rains in the month of May resulted in one stretch of McDowell Creek Road being declared an emergency area.

Sections of the road began sinking around 5 or 6 p.m. May 23, Public Works Director Dan Harden said.

In some places, it dropped as much as 25 feet. The affected stretch of road was 1,300 to 1,400 feet long and about 2-1/2 miles south of the junction with Kansas Highway 177, Harden said.

In places, the road is now 40-to-50 feet west of its original position.

The damage occurred because the hill east of the road moved west and slid under the road, said, John Fagan, consulting engineer with Schwab-Eaton Public Engineers.

Traffic was detoured to Interstate 70 either on Kansas Highway 18 or K-177, Harden said. Travelers could get on McDowell Creek Road from I-70 to get to places south of the damage.

SPORTS

Women's rowing goes varsity

The women's rowing team will become a varsity sport in 1996-97 as a result of K-State's efforts to comply with Title IX.

The men's team will remain a club sport.

Title IX, a federal gender-equity act passed in 1972, mandates colleges and universities provide equal opportunities for women athletes.

It requires the number of women athletes and the scholarships and funding for their sports be proportional within a certain percentage to the female population on campus.

Alan Koch, rowing coach, said the women's team becoming a varsity sport could help both teams. The teams will probably still share some of the same equipment and travel together.

The women's team will eventually have scholarships and have part of their travel expenses paid, Koch said.

Being International

■ Students at K-State come from all around the world but find they have to cope with special problems

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

Increasing numbers of international students will attend K-State during the 1995-96 school year.

About 150 new international students are expected to filter to the K-State campus during the upcoming school year, said Motaz Hourani, program coordinator for International Student Services.

K-State is home to about 1,100 international students, representing nearly 100 countries, Hourani said.

> Mort Hoss
> "You very rarely encounter a racist. Most people don't even realize what they're doing.

Academic opportunities at K-State drew Affan Habib, from Bangladesh, to the United States.

Habib, freshman in civil engineering, said he chose K-State over such schools as Washington State, Texas A&M and the University of Texas-Austin because of its high-ranking civil engineering program.

Habib arrived at K-State last week and was pleased with the way orientation went, he said.

"It is very positive for a newcomer like me. Everyone is very friendly and helpful," Habib said.

However, the enrollment process is very confusing, he said.

Habib's roommate, Mort Hoss, is a graduate student from Iran. Mort has been at K-State for three years after attending Johnson County Community College for two years. After a tour of the campus, Hoss chose K-State instead of the University of Kansas, the University of Missouri-Kansas City and the University of Missouri.

"Manhattan is far from the headaches of the city but still close," Hoss said.

"It is very student-oriented."

The teachers are very attentive to the needs of students, and the classes are not too large, Hoss said.

During his three years at K-State, Hoss said he has noticed the stereotypes given to international students.

"You very seldom encounter a racist," Hoss said. "Most people don't even realize what they're doing."

However, international students are often treated differently, Hoss said.

"Other students separate themselves from international students," Hoss said.

"For one reason or another, they don't feel comfortable around them," he said.

"Students don't realize that a lot of knowledge can be gained from getting to know an international student," Hoss said.

$46,060 grant helps RCPD

■ Riley County Police hope to help local kindergarten through sixth-grade children avoid drugs and stay out of trouble in the future, lowering the incidents of crime

Camille Wood
staff reporter

The Riley County Police Department has been awarded a $40,060 federal grant for local anti-drug programs.

The Edward Byrne Memorial State and Local Assistance Grant Program will be used to upgrade criminal justice and anti-drug law enforcement in Kansas.

The program was named after a police officer killed in the line of duty.

Some communities asked for the money to be used for multi-jurisdictional drug task forces.

The money was used to make drug buys and catch dealers, said Nancy Lindberg, assistant to the Kansas Attorney General.

Riley County will be using the money for its Drug Abuse Resistance Education program.

Agencies must submit an application to receive the Edward Byrne grant money.

The grant is worth $3.2 million this year.

The RCPD matched the grant money contribution, Lindberg said.

By increasing children's awareness to the dangers of drugs, the state hopes to have fewer crime incidents in the future.

> Larry George
> "Most get their information from MTV and HBO, so they need to know that what they see on TV is inaccurate.

With the money, DARE will be able to continue educating sixth-grade core classes and expand the number of presentations in kindergarten through fifth-grade classes.

The program reaches about 1,700 students in Riley County.

DARE Officer Larry George of the RCPD is in charge of educating these children.

He visits 13 elementary schools in Riley County.

"My whole day is spent with the children," he said. "They hire only one officer to do the DARE program, and that's me."

George said most of the money pays for his position and time.

Children are provided with knowledge about drugs and their effects, and also skills to resist the temptation of drugs they don't get from watching television, George said.

"Most get their information from MTV and HBO, so they need to know that what they see on TV is inaccurate," he said.

George said it is vital to educate the elementary grade levels.

He said he feels that is the age when children develop their own personal behaviors.

Although it is George's primary goal to teach kids to say no to drugs and gang association, he said it is just as important to get drug education from parents and schools.

Faces & places

K-State students are offered a panorama of services on the campus. There are people who want to provide for each student with a culturally, academically and socially successful college career.

The Collegian staff has included a partial list of people and places that students can go to find help with anything from getting involved on campus to finding money to pay for school.

Dwain Archer
director of Parking Services

Parking Services is all about offering students the opportunity to park on campus, Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

This year, parking services is trying a few new things to simplify parking on campus.

"The hang tags are now permanent," Archer said. "We now have permanent decals that stick on like a license plate's decals."

Also, the residence halls began pre-selling parking permits for this fall's residents, he said.

And in an effort to eliminate long waiting lines, Archer said he hopes to begin mailing permits in the future.

Archer has a bachelor's degree in fire science and public safety and began working with the K-State parking and police department in 1990.

Fred Newton
director of University Counseling Services

University Counseling Services focuses on helping students.

"We are geared to be working with students so we are very aware and attuned to how they can be successful in their academic endeavors," Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said.

The counseling service, which is paid for through service fees, is about 50 percent cheaper than using a professional counseling service.

Students can also learn about stress management, study skills, career planning and a variety of other student issues at the counseling service.

Newton began working with students at K-State in 1980 and has a doctorate in psychology.

Ronnie Grice
director of K-State Police

K-State Police patrol the campus 24 hours a day trying to provide a safe haven for students to live, work and study.

"The mission statement of the police department is to provide a safe and secure environment for the Univer-sity community," Ronnie Grice, director of campus police, said.

Grice advises students to utilize the campus escort service at night and secure their residence hall rooms.

"One of the biggest things we deal with is theft," Grice said.

Students should use a little common sense and secure their personal belongings, Grice said.

For K-State to be a safe campus, students and faculty will have to keep an eye open for strange occurrences, he said.

Dianne Urban
attorney for legal services for students

If you are a student at K-State having landlord problems or need help in court for some minor misdemeanors, you can get some free help.

Most of the services offered by Dianne Urban, attorney of legal services for students, are free.

Urban, who has served students at K-State since June 1983, counsels and gives advice to students about a variety of legal problems and scenarios.

Bernard Franklin
assistant dean of Student Life

Being a student often carries with it multiple layers of problems and questions. When the questions and problems start to stack up, students can turn to the Student Life office for a little help.

"I see myself as helping students be successful in a somewhat complex environment," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of Student Life, said.

Franklin and Carla Jones, who is also an assistant dean of Student Life, provide services for students with questions about almost anything.

The first few weeks of school are always a busy time for the Student Life office because questions range from how to get back into school and how to stay in school.

Student Life offers counseling, advice and assistance, Franklin said.

Students should not be afraid to utilize all the services offered to them academically, as well as counseling, Jones said.

Tricia Nolfi
coordinator of Student Activities

Acting as a general resource for student organizations on campus takes up a large amount of Tricia Nolfi's time.

Nolfi, coordinator of Student Activities, spends a lot of time working with the leaders of many student organizations and the students involved with student government.

"The students at K-State are the best I've ever worked with," Nolfi said. "They are so motivated."

New students can ask Nolfi about how to get involved with a K-State organization or student government.

Nolfi began working at K-State in June 1993 after working with Student Activities at Western Illinois University, Tulane University and Ohio University.

Students at K-State are exposed to a variety of cultures and ethnic events while on the campus.

Barb Robel
advisor for Greek Affairs

More than 300 students filter through the Greek Affairs office during any given week throughout the school year. The students work with Barb Robel, advisor for Greek Affairs, organizing interfraternity and Panhellenic programming.

Robel, who has worked at K-State since 1974, said participating within the greek system helps students develop leadership and personal skills. Robel said she enjoys working with the greek system because she participated in it as an undergraduate.

"I am an advocate of it," she said.

Aside from working with programming and scheduling for the greeks, Robel also counsel and recruit greek students.

Dina Bennett
coordinator of Multicultural Student Organizations

The Office of Multicultural Student Organizations can help students who are interested in finding groups that suit their cultural, academic and social needs.

Bennett works with students who want to be involved in a multicultural campus organizations, including Black Student Union, Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Native American Student Body and ethnic sororities and fraternities.

"I didn't feel like I had much direction or guidance as an undergraduate student," Bennett said.

And now she wants to help students find an organization to belong to.

Bennett has worked with students at K-State in different programs for two years. She has a masters in counseling and student personal.

Freeman Davis, coordinator and advisor to the national Pan-Hellenic Council, also helps students with multicultural concerns.

Mordean Taylor-Archer is the assistant provost of the Office of Multicultural Affairs.

Shah Hasan
assistant director of Housing and Dining Services

After stumbling through the doors of K-State's residence halls, many students tend to feel a little overwhelmed.

But the people who run the Department of Housing and Dining want students to feel comfortable in their new home.

"Our focus is to help student succeed academically and succeed in college in general," Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining, said.

Hasan coordinates the resident assistants and resident staff that work with students on a personal level within the halls.

Resident staff are trained to communicate with students, help them feel comfortable in a new environment and plan programs that interest the residents.

Hasan has a master's degree in higher education and student affairs.

Paying fees to the sounds of Truck Stop Love

review by Kady Guyton • contributing writer

What is Truck Stop Love?

"Truck Stop Love is four guys who are stupid enough to play two hours without a canopy in 100-degree heat and still not play all the slow songs," Eric Melin, drummer for the band, said.

Truck Stop Love reintroduced themselves to K-State with a two-hour set Thursday afternoon between Seaton Hall and the K-State Student Union. It was the first time the band had ever played during fee payment.

"This is something completely new, and we'll see if we don't die of heat stroke," said Melin, slathering on sunscreen to complicate the tanning process.

Although the weather was warm, and most of the audience was on its way to pay fees, a loyal group of about 20 people took the opportunity to sit on the curb, forget about the gaping holes in their checkbooks and enjoy something free besides coupons.

Truck Stop Love did not disappoint, playing a mixed bag of old favorites and new releases with a Tom Petty cover tune thrown in at the end for variety.

Guitarists Rich Yarges and Matt Mozier kept the show moving along with solid vocals and tight playing. Brad Huhmann provided the strong bass line and treated listeners to the only song he sings, a hidden track at the tail end of the band's album "How I Spent My Summer Vacation," released in April.

By playing Wednesday night at Club Berlin, the band earned gas money for its East Coast tour, Melin said.

Truck Stop Love toured the West Coast last year, and Melin said that going east was the next logical step in support of the band's first full-length album.

The two-week tour started Friday in Minneapolis. The group will hit Cleveland, Washington D.C., New York City, and some southern states before returning to Kansas.

But the tour bus isn't exactly a Greyhound. In fact, it's not even a Volkswagen. It's a 1979 Gaucho van.

"We'll be driving the whole way, and, in true Truck Stop Love style, we'll have no air conditioning," Melin said with a laugh.

Most people have never even heard of the vehicle. Neither had the insurance company.

"We tried to get the van insured, and the insurance people had no record of it. They said a van of that year and model didn't exist," Melin said. "We had to show them the van before they would insure us."

When asked about future plans, Melin said the group was open to anything.

▶ OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING

Man may be 169th victim

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — A woman says a leg found in the bombed-out federal building may belong to her son, who was last seen at the building shortly before the explosion, KWTV reported Friday.

Theresa Bennett told the Oklahoma City station that Sidney Aaron McCallum was dropped off at the building's Social Security office the morning of the April 19 blast.

The leg, which belonged to a man about 30 years old, had a military-style boot, Fred Jordan, the state medical examiner, said. Bennett said her 29-year-old son was known to wear military boots.

DNA tests on the leg at an FBI laboratory in Washington are expected to be completed within a few days. If testing fails to turn up a match to any of the known victims, then there is little hope of identifying the leg, Jordan said.

The death count will probably be raised to 169 if the tests fail to turn up a match, Jordan said.

Bennett, who did not go to police, said at first she just assumed her son had gone off without telling anybody because he has done that before, the station reported.

A spokesman for the medical examiner said the office will ask police to look into Bennett's report.

The lawyer for bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh has suggested that the leg may belong to the real bomber.

Truck Stop Love starts coastal tour with Berlin show

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Truck Stop Love played a blistering set of Manhattan-grown rural rock before an audience of about 80 people at Club Berlin Wednesday night.

The band released its first full-length album, "How I Spent My Summer Vacation," last spring.

Of course, TSL played its hometown before launching an East Coast tour that will bring the band to the renowned College Music Journal Festival in New York City.

Opening for TSL was Kansas City's Grither, a trio that performed a set of tight, tasty tunes for a rather unappreciative crowd.

Grither, whose drummer is a former member of the legendary Lawrence band Stick, played songs that stand somewhere between the mad riffage of Nirvana and the listenability of the post-Nirvana-resurrection The Foo Fighters.

Grither manages to pull of good, gutsy songs without all the messy grunge on your grout.

Perhaps the audience was apathetic because they haven't heard Grither's five-song EP, "All Smiles," on mainstream radio.

By the time TSL took the stage around 11:30 p.m., the audience had grown significantly. The crowd seemed ready to hear the band. This was evident because instead of standing silently about 20 feet from the band, the crowd now stood silently about 10 feet away.

TSL opened with the title cut of its album, "How I Spent My Summer Vacation," which seemed rather appropriate for the fee-payment-week crowd.

Some members of the audience knew the words to almost every TSL song, even those from demo tapes released years back. The band received warm applause and shouts after nearly every song.

After about an hour of songs like "You Owe," "You Don't Have to Try, Girl," "Can't Hear It" and "Walton's Mountain," the band's set list was completed. It was only 12:30 a.m., so it asked for requests.

Not surprisingly, they soon tore into their contribution to the Tom Petty tribute album, "Listen To Her Heart."

By then, the audience had downed enough brew to feel unrepressed enough to dance. As the band played new tunes and old stuff alike, parts of the audience bobbed and, of course, others remained as still as rocks.

In Manhattan, these behaviors constitute pandemonium.

The band refused to quit playing. The audience kept cheering for more tunes, so more overdriven jangle was launched until past 1:30 a.m., a rather late hour for most live bands to be playing.

TSL knows what it's doing. The band has a buttload of material to play until all hours of the night, it has the stamina to keep up with a demanding audience, and it's carving a niche as an outstanding rural rock band.

After the show, TSL drummer Eric Melin, who happens to have one of the most brutal snare drums you can hear, reflected on why they stayed up so late on this night of their summer vacation.

"Usually we don't get this much response from an audience, so even though it's late, we wanted to keep playing," Melin said.

Try out for K-State Theatre

Russell Fortmeyer
staff writer

If you've ever wanted to be someone else, K-State Theatre has a solution.

Take a walk outside yourself and audition for a part in an upcoming production.

Auditions for "Twelfth Night," "The Music Man," "Album" and the Ebony Theatre production will be at 7 p.m. today and Tuesday in the Nichols Hall lobby.

Marci Maullar, managing director of K-State Theatre, said students can audition for as many of the shows as they wish.

She said she also suggests wearing comfortable clothes and if auditioning for "Music Man," to be prepared for some dancing and singing.

Songs for "Music Man" may be brought to auditions, but it is optional, Maullar said. If music is brought in, it does not have to be music from the play.

Maullar said interested students should at least come and check it out.

"Our directors are very kind. They won't make fun of you. They want the students to do well," she said.

"It shouldn't be that scary of a situation," Maullar said.

Maullar said students in all majors are welcome to audition.

The musical always has a lot of non-majors, she said. She recommends attending to preview what's involved with one of the shows.

"If you had fun in musicals in high school, then you will have fun with us," Maullar said.

"Twelfth Night," Shakespeare's gamy comedy directed by Charlotte MacFarland, will have a cast of 15 to 20 people.

TRYOUTS TODAY

▶ Auditions for the K-State Theatre department's fall season will be today and Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Nichols Hall lobby. Scripts are available in Nichols 129. Call 532-6875 for information.

"The Music Man," a classic musical comedy directed by Luke Kahlich, will have a larger cast of about 25 people, including the large chorus.

"Album" is the Purple Masque production being directed by graduate student Jay Robbins.

The Ebony Theatre production has not been announced yet.

For students interested in reading the script before auditions, copies of the shows are available in Nichols 129. "Twelfth Night" is available in Farrell Library, and it is possible to rent "The Music Man" at almost any video store.

Callbacks will be posted in the hallway outside Nichols 131. They will be Wednesday.

Rehearsals for "Twelfth Night" will start right away, probably on Thursday, Maullar said.

The rehearsal schedule for most plays will be 7-10 p.m. weekdays. Weekend rehearsals begin the week before the play opens. This translates into a lot of work for the actors, Maullar said.

"You do have to make a commitment," she said.

Lawyers argue for release of prisoners

Associated Press

OLATHE — Three men being held indefinitely under Kansas' Sexual Predator law must be freed because they are not receiving the treatment required under the law, attorneys argue in court documents.

Motions seeking the release of an Olathe man and two men from Sedgwick County were filed Friday in Pawnee County.

The three are at the Larned Correctional Mental Health Facility in Pawnee County.

The Sexual Predator Act passed by the Legislature two years ago requires care and treatment for those designated as sexual predators, said Nancy Orrick, an attorney who represents Kenneth Hay, one of the three men.

Orrick said Hay has not received any treatment since he was sent to Larned more than four months ago by Johnson County District Judge Peter Ruddick.

"He's sitting around watching television and playing his guitar," Orrick said.

"He's upset. He was sent there for treatment. He wants treatment, but he's not getting any treatment," she said.

Orrick argued in her court filing that there is no clinical director or clinical staff employed at Larned's Sexual Predator Treatment Program, that no treatment has been provided and that without treatment the program amounts to unlawful incarceration.

The law states that sexually violent predators are unlikely to be rehabilitated in a prison setting.

Therefore, a civil commitment procedure for the long-term care and treatment of the sexually violent predator is found to be necessary, the statute states.

Hay had served about 38 months in prison for five aggravated indecent solicitation convictions and was about to get out of prison last spring when Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison filed a petition to have him designated a sexual predator.

A jury did so after a week-long trial.

Mental health experts testified that Hay is a confirmed pedophile who will never change.

Orrick has said Hay's placement in the program is essentially a life sentence because a doctor will never be found who will be able to certify that he can be released.

"It's a liability and malpractice issue," she said.

Pro-life group challenges park ordinance

Associated Press

WICHITA — A pro-life group has filed a federal lawsuit against the city of Independence's park-use policy.

Midwest Pregnancy Care Center Inc., which does business as Midwest Pregnancy Care Center of Independence, filed the action Thursday in U.S. District Court in Wichita.

The suit states Midwest asked on Feb. 14 to use a city park in June for an event promoting the pro-life viewpoint. After delaying consideration at its March meeting, the City Commission voted April 6 to adopt a policy barring the use of parks for political advocacy.

Midwest asked for an injunction preventing Independence from enforcing the policy. The lawsuit does not seek any monetary damages.

The lawsuit says the city's rules violate the constitutional protection of free speech, freedom of assembly and equal treatment under the law.

Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall issued an opinion July 25 saying the policy is unconstitutional. City Commissioner Mike Seller called her finding just another attorney's opinion.

The suit was filed on behalf of the pregnancy counseling center and Stephen Grimes of Independence, the center's board chairman. Grimes was out of town Friday and unavailable for comment.

Eric Commer of Wichita filed the suit, but was also out of town and unavailable for comment Friday, according to his secretary.

The Liberty Counsel, a religious civil liberties legal defense group based in Orlando, Fla., hired Commer as local counsel.

"If political speech is not permitted in a public park, then we have lost the shield the First Amendment provides against government oppression of opposing views," Mathew Staver, a Liberty Counsel lawyer, said.

Paul Sasse, Independence city manager, was out of town and unavailable for comment Friday, his secretary said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

NASA to fund K-State Salina project

Dana Harding
staff reporter

NASA is setting up shop at K-State-Salina's campus.

The ER-2 High Altitude Airborne Science Program, which is funded and sponsored by NASA at the K-State-Salina campus, will begin in April 1996.

"Not only will this program bring national and international attention to K-State-Salina, but scientists, pilots and crews will be interacting with the students and faculty," said Jack Henry, dean of K-State-Salina campus.

NASA will locate its personnel and equipment at the base in Salina and will fully fund all aspects of the of the environmental research project, Henry said.

The project will use ER-2 airplanes to collect data on earth resources, celestial observations, atmospheric chemistry and dynamics, oceanic processes and spacecraft sensor development.

"NASA brings a tremendous amount of experience and technology along with them, as well as more visibility for the campus," said John Koehler, assistant department head of the Aeronautical Technology Department.

ER-2s are recycled versions of U2 planes, which were originally used as spy planes to gather information about Russia, he said.

The airplane was built with long, thin wings similar to a glider's and was able to go undetected by radar, but today the airplanes will be used for atmospheric research.

On a single flight, the ER-2 can carry numerous different instruments to altitudes above 65,000 feet for up to five hours.

The airplane can reach an altitude of 14 miles, above 95 percent of the earth's atmosphere. The ER-2 is often used as a surrogate satellite.

K-State-Salina was chosen over several other candidate airfields in the Midwest because of its excellent facilities, geographic location and academic environment, said Alan Cartledge, scientist at High Altitude Missions Branch of Ames Research Center.

A previous project by the High Altitude Aircraft Program discovered the enormous ozone loss over the Antarctic, caused specifically by chlorofluorocarbons, he said.

NASA has planned to use the college's west hangar to house the ER-2 and the laboratories needed for the 25 science teams and 50 scientists to conduct the atmospheric research.

They also plan to use an aircraft tug for towing the ER-2 aircraft and an existing concrete pad at the north end of the west hangar for storage of 12,000 gallons of fuel.

The environmental research project is unclassified, allowing NASA to employ students and faculty for help with the research.

Citizens from the Salina community will be welcomed to the site to view the ER-2 plane and to visit the research labs.

Troops deploy to Kuwait

Associated Press

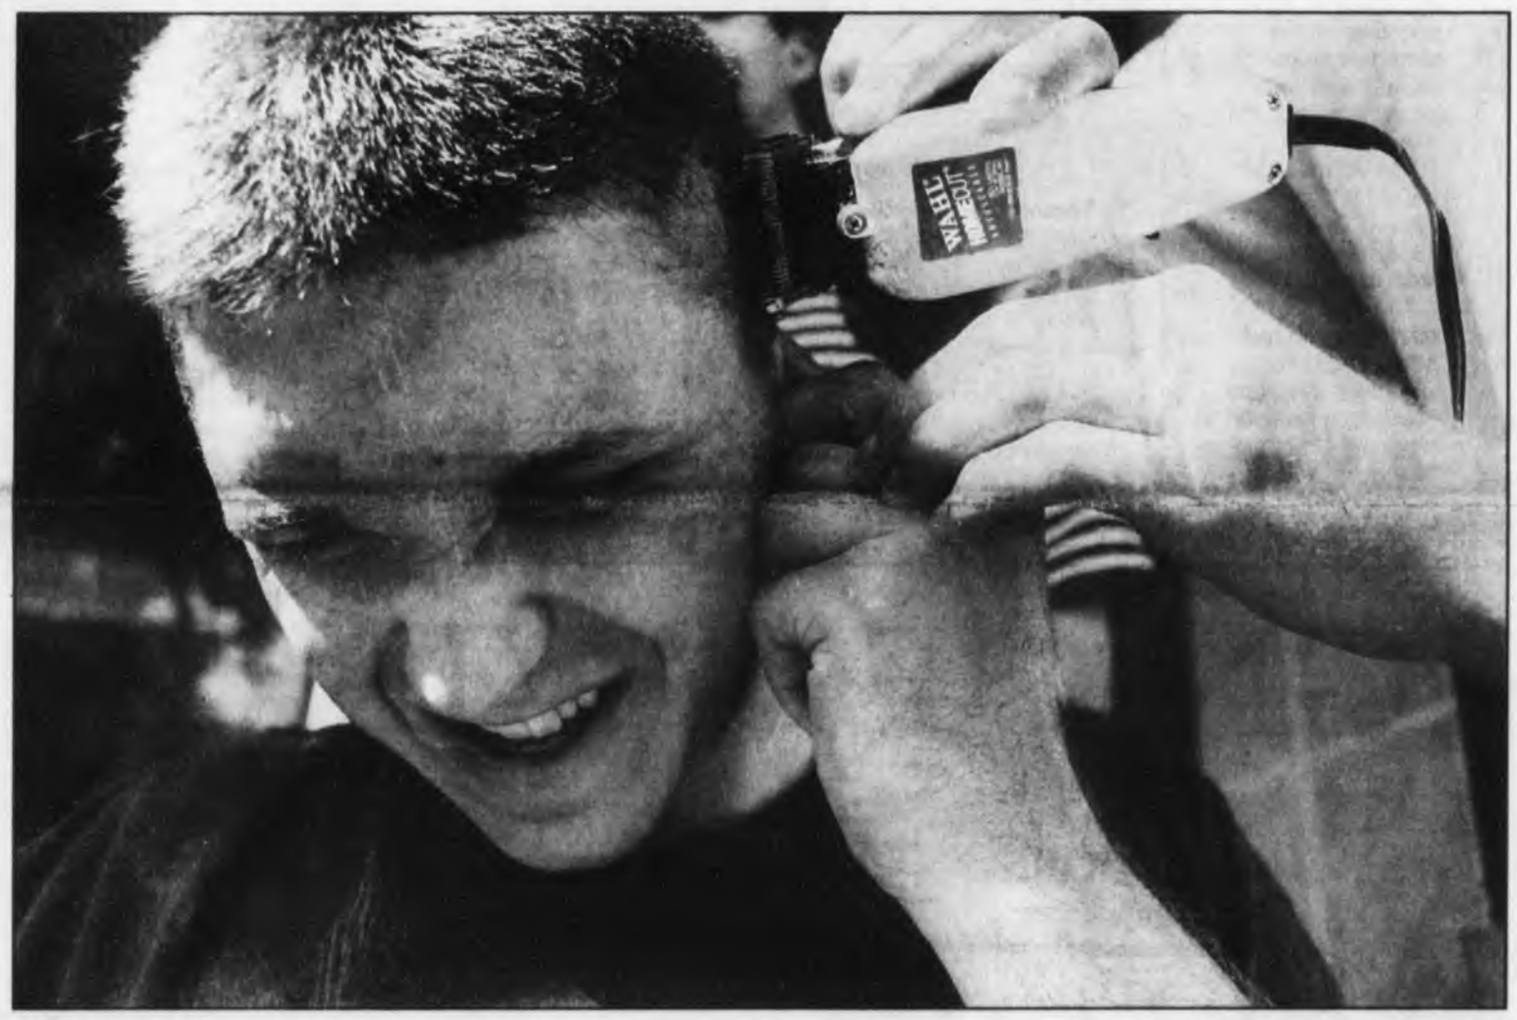
About 300 U.S. Marines and sailors left California's Camp Pendleton today and several hundred soldiers waited to fly out of Fort Hood, Texas, for Middle East military exercises to deter Iraqi aggression.

The Fort Hood deployment was troubled for the second straight day by delays the Army would explain only vaguely.

A flight was canceled Sunday, and today 270 soldiers stood by waiting to board a DC-10 that had been scheduled to take off at 8 a.m., Staff Sgt. Christian Mulvey said.

"Part of the coordination required en route still needs to be completed to ensure a smooth arrival," Mulvey said in identical statements both days. "It is impossible to predict the length of the delay, but it doesn't appear it will be long."

Eighty soldiers in battle-dress uniform left Fort Hood aboard a C-141 cargo plane Sunday. Besides the DC-10, two 747s were scheduled to leave by this afternoon for training in Kuwait.



The four- to six-week exercise called Operation Intrinsic Action was planned for October but moved up because of increasing instability in Iraq.

A son-in-law of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein who defected to Jordan said Sunday that his departure foiled an Iraqi plan to invade Kuwait and Saudi Arabia earlier this month.

In a separate U.S. show of force against Saddam, members of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force left March Air Force Base in Riverside County, Calif., today for the Persian Gulf, 1st Lt. Dave Griesmer said. The Camp Pendleton Marines will prepare combat equipment aboard ships.

Their departure is the first of a planned three-phase operation that would deploy 16,500 Marines from Southern California bases, including Camp Pendleton, Griesmer said.

A similar deployment last year never reached the third phase because U.S. officials said they thought Iraq was backing down from a military threat.

Union for GTAs may solve problems

Nicole Kirby
staff writer

A tentative plan to unionize graduate teaching assistants across campus might identify and solve some GTA work condition problems.

"We're not deciding what the problems are," Bruce Reid, graduate student in sociology, said. "We're trying to get input from the students."

Reid and five or six graduate students working on the project are trying to find out how much support they can expect from other GTAs, Bruce Reid said.

Some of the issues discussed within the union could be lack of health care, payment and hours required to complete the workload assigned, Reid said.

"If students feel that there is a need to pursue it further, then we will," Reid said.

The group is planning to send out a survey to GTAs and find out what issues they would like addressed by a union that could act as an institutional voice, Bridget Murphy, graduate student in sociology, who is also working on the project, said.

"The problem varies across departments, but we don't have any voice if any problem comes

Hey brother, can you spare me a nickel?

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

You probably thought you were done letting the University milk you for every last hard-earned nickel you saved over the summer.

Well now even the cost of pop on campus is going to cost you more — about a nickel more.

Union Vending Services has increased the traditional price of 50 cents for a can of pop to 55 cents.

The price hike can be attributed to Coke and Pepsi raising their prices, Bill Wisdom, vending services manager, said.

"They blamed it on the price of aluminum going up," Wisdom said.

He said some of the price change is due to the University being annexed by the city of Manhattan last year. This added a sales tax to all purchases made on campus, including vending items.

Vending services had kept the price at 50 cents, hoping the cola companies would lower their prices, but that hasn't happened, Wisdom said.

"There are certain expectations that we maintain or improve our financial contribution back to the budget," Wisdom said.

With the cost of insurance, products and wage increases, raising the price was necessary, Wisdom said.

The changeover from 50 cents to 55 cents occurred in May after graduation, Wisdom said.

"We don't like the 55-cent price," he said.

Wisdom said increasing the cost 5 cents makes it harder to keep enough change available.

It is also hard for students to find another nickel.

"You always have quarters, and it's always

Tax dollars to fund escort service for students living off-campus

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Students who live five or six blocks from campus might be able to get an escort starting in fall 1996.

The city commission approved a $20,000 allocation from the City/University Projects Fund for the implementation of a walking patrol on campus.

The fund contains money from city taxes charged on campus. It was created when the University was annexed by the city a year ago.

"Bob Krause and Tom Rawson were already working on a proposal for fiscal year 1997," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

The seed money for the project became available when the commission voted against funding scholarships with the money.

"This was a switch of focus from scholarships," Mayor Edith Stunkel said.

A majority of the commission said they felt the scholarships would be used to benefit only a few people, while the walking patrol would benefit all students, Stunkel said.

The $1,000 scholarships would have been awarded to 20 Manhattan residents through the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

"City money at this point in time is not something I would like to see benefit a student uniquely," she said.

The walking patrols would be scheduled each evening, and students in the patrol would be paid. Each patrol would be composed of a male and female.

Of the $20,000 allocated to K-State, $5,000 to $6,000 of it will be spent on equipment, walkie-talkies, flashlights and any necessary training. The rest of the money will be spent on the salaries for the first semester.

The walking patrols would be able to escort students living five or six blocks off campus to their homes, Finkeldei said.

"We wanted to get it going for this year, but it's not going to happen," he said.

Although the escort service will not start this year, Finkeldei said there is a bright side. By waiting another year before beginning the walking patrols, the Wildcat Walk Escort Service will have another year of operation under its belt.

By the time the walking patrols are

Budget to fund 6 K-State projects

Cori Cornelison
staff writer

The 1996 Manhattan city budget includes $355,000 for six K-State projects.

The six projects are a bicycle path with flashing emergency vehicle access lights, additional campus lighting, a traffic signal at College and Kimball avenues, landscaping, funds for Farrell and Manhattan libraries and an escort service.

The $20,000 allocated for the escort system will help pay escorts to go up to seven blocks off campus.

After about an hour of debating on Aug. 15, city commissioners compromised on a $335,821 cut in the overall city budget.

Commissioner Justin Kastner said because of the unanticipated increase of reappraisal of property, which increased by about 8.25 percent, he felt there needed to be a deeper cut in the budget than he originally proposed on Aug. 1.

His original cut was at a mill rate of .833, which is a $131,938 cut in the budget.

One mill for the city is about $158,400. This number is 1/1000 of the assessed valuation of property in Manhattan, which is about $158.4 million, said Rich Doan, assistant director of finance and city clerk.

The higher reappraisal value in Manhattan is mostly due to the annexation of new buildings and the reappraisal of existing structures, Doan said.

Kastner said the 2.18-mill cut that city commissioners passed will in most cases mean property owners will owe less in taxes. But if their property were reappraised at a higher amount, they could come out even or end up owing more in taxes.

For example, if a Manhattan resident's home were originally appraised at $75,000 and reappraised at the same amount, then the two-mill reduction would mean the owner would owe several dollars less in taxes.

With a 2-mill cut, city commissioners might have to make a decision to raise taxes in the future to offset future cost increases, Doan said.

"Either the mill levy will have to increase, or there will have to be future cuts or a combination of both," he said.

If the revenue is higher than anticipated, there could be a cash carryover to offset the future cost increases, Doan said.

Kastner cautioned against making more than a 2-mill cut in taxes because it might mean taxes would have to be increased more in the future to compensate for the cuts now.

"My concern is I think we should be careful in cutting off our noses in spite of our face," Kastner said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he agreed with Kastner's opinion that the city needed to make deeper cuts, and he seconded Kastner's proposal to make a $386,000 cut in the budget. The $386,000 cut failed to pass with a 2-2 vote.

Mayor Edith Stunkel and Commissioner Steve Hall argued that $386,000 was too much of a cut and proposed to make a lower cut of $310,000, which failed 2-2.

After continued efforts to pass the budget, Stunkel said this is why we have five

▶ BOMB KILLS 5 COMMUTERS IN ISRAEL; PEACE TALKS PUT ON ICE

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Islamic militant, possibly a woman, set off a suicide bomb Monday that tore through two crowded Israeli commuter buses headed for Hebrew University. The blast shredded one bus into a twisted metal cobweb and killed five people, including an American tourist.

The police investigation focused on two mutilated and unidentified bodies. Police Chief Arieh Amit said the condition of the woman's body suggested she could have been holding the TNT bomb.

The Muslim militant group Hamas claimed responsibility for the blast, which injured more than 100 people during morning rush hour in Jerusalem and forced the suspension of Israel-PLO talks on expanding Palestinian self-rule.

In a leaflet issued in Syria, Hamas said, "The Israeli government will pay for the war declared against Islam and Muslims." Hamas, which opposes the peace talks, has demanded a complete Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza Strip, including all settlements, and a bigger role for itself in representing Palestinians.

The dead were identified as Joan Davanney, a Hebrew school teacher from Woodbridge, Conn., Rivka Cohen, a 26-year-old Israeli, and Noam Eizenman, an Israeli policeman. Davanney had been gathering material for her class on the history of Israel.

▶ BALKAN TALKS TO CONTINUE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Insisting peace can be brought to the Balkans, the Clinton administration's senior foreign advisers planned a resumption of shuttle diplomacy Monday even as the bodies of three Americans who died in the pursuit came home to solemn eulogies.

"The effort to bring peace to Bosnia will continue," Secretary of State Warren Christopher pledged on the steaming tarmac of Andrews Air Force Base, as families and friends of the three dead peacemakers dabbed at their eyes with handkerchiefs and suppressed sobs.

The frustrating attempt to open negotiations between warring ethnic factions has not succeeded, but Defense Secretary William Perry said Bosnia-Herzegovina was closer to peace than ever before.

▶ MICROSOFT SETTLES IN COURT

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge signed a 13-month-old antitrust settlement between Microsoft Corp. and the Justice Department on Monday, ending judicial review made long by another judge's rejection of the agreement.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson's order covered a deal under which the software company halted some incentives to computer makers that prosecutors said reduced competition.

Under the deal, Microsoft agreed to stop giving personal computer manufacturers a discount if they paid the company a royalty for each PC sold.

The practice gave PC makers little incentive to install competing programs since they would have had to pay a royalty to both companies.

▶ FED MAY CUT INTEREST RATES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top Federal Reserve policy-makers will not cut interest rates when they meet this week and there may be only one further rate reduction in store before the end of the year, private economists now believe.

If that assessment is correct, it will be a disappointment for millions of borrowers who had hoped interest on their home-equity loans and other variable-rate loans might be headed down more quickly.

"I don't believe there will be any change in interest rates this week although there will be a lively discussion on Fed policy in light of an improvement in the economy and better-than-expected inflation prospects," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at Lehman Brothers Global Economics.

The central bank's Federal Open Market Committee convenes Tuesday.

▶ REFORM SCHOOL FIRE KILLS 37

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Young women desperate to escape from a church-run reform school apparently set fires in their rooms Monday, hoping to flee when guards unlocked the dormitory doors.

The fires swept out of control, and 37 women died before the doors were opened to let firemen in.

Many of the dead were packed into restrooms, and news reports said bloodstains and fingernail scratches on the barred windows showed their frantic efforts to escape the flames.

The victims either burned to death or suffocated. One was only 13. Sixteen others were injured.

The school had a history of escape attempts and was known for strict discipline of the women, most of them runaways caught working in brothels and bars.

State certification may change soon

■ Regents committee
discussing eliminating certification by grade levels

Angela Showalter
staff reporter

Students receiving degrees in education might face radical changes in state certification standards.

New licensing standards will eliminate certification by grade levels and license by developmental stages of a child's growth, said Warren White, coordinator of teacher education and professor of special education.

"Trying to predict how it ultimately will affect our college is pretty tenuous," White said.

The possible changes are still being discussed in Topeka by a regulations committee, which is working on a final proposal to be presented to the Standards Board by November, White said.

Under the current system, teachers are certified to teach by grade levels with elementary and secondary certifications.

But the new system splits a child's growth into five separate levels of development, he said.

"It's an excellent idea. Early childhood is between the ages of 4 and 8. Now you can care for that age," Kat Jordan, senior in early childhood education, said.

> "It's an excellent idea. Early childhood is between the ages of 4 and 8. Now you can care for that age"
> KAT JORDAN, SENIOR IN EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT

Until the new system takes effect, teachers of day care will be in limbo until the certification system is finalized, Jordan said.

The committee recommended initially that Early Childhood Development be split into an infant stage, from birth to 3 years, and an early childhood stage, 3 to 8 years, White said.

However, there was some controversy about whether or not there should be a separate infancy stage.

Some professors argued that early childhood development should not be split into two stages, proposing it should be one stage from birth through eighth grade.

The regulations committee now proposes to make licensing for all teachers mandatory through at least two developmental stages, Ken Bungert, director of Certification and Teacher Education at the State Department of Education, said.

Regulators were concerned that special education would not fall under the umbrella of two developmental stages and instead require teachers to acquire a second license to teach special education, Bungert said.

However, the plan is that the early childhood license will also include special education, he said.

Those graduating under the new system will also have to face a sort of trial period with a provisional license, White said.

During this period, new teachers will teach for two years with numerous assessments of their performances.

Just how the final assessment system will be worked out is still under discussion with no definite plan at the current time, White said.

When the regulations committee presents to the Standards Board, the proposal will be published and open meetings will occur for public input, Bungert said.

Meetings will probably begin in either January or February.

And if the Standards Board ratifies the proposal, it will be sent on to the State Board of Education where it will have to be ratified after another round of meetings.

The final ratification by the State Board probably won't happen until the spring of 1997 at the earliest, Bungert said.

Water-damage renovations almost finished

Kimberly Hefling
staff reporter

Renovations made necessary in May by water damage to Varney's Book Store are almost complete.

"As of right now, we're about 90 percent into getting things completely back together, but then again, we've never been at 100 percent of where we want to be," Jon Levin, owner, said.

Although the store was able to open around 11 a.m. May 24, the day after the accident happened, the damage that took place the evening before when water caused the roof to collapse was extensive.

There was minimal damage to some of the store's trade books, and the art and technical supplies had to be moved into a satellite store directly behind the main store, Levin said.

None of the textbook inventory was affected.

The main store entrance was also temporarily moved to the north side of the building.

All of the store's merchandise has been moved back into the main store.

As a result of the damage this summer, roof drains were redesigned, carpet and tile flooring were replaced and merchandise was removed from the shipping area.

Following the collapse, Levin said the insurance company brought in a catastrophe team to evaluate the situation.

It is still impossible to evaluate how extensive damages were, Levin said, because there were damages to both the structure and to merchandise.

In 1989, Varney's Book Store moved to the location in Aggieville following a renovation of the building.

Manhattan and K-State work for improvements

The city annexed K-State a year ago under the stipulation that money raised would go into a special fund for projects that would benefit both the city and the University.

The city of Manhattan has come through for K-State on two fronts.

First, the city has kept its promise of using money raised from city taxes on campus for projects that benefit K-State.

The city annexed K-State a year ago under the stipulation that money raised from the annexation would go into a special fund for projects that would benefit both the city and University. This concept has recently been realized.

Six projects will be allocated a total of $355,000 gleaned from this annexation: a campus bicycle path with flashing emergency vehicle access lights, additional campus lighting and a traffic signal at College and Kimball avenues.

Funds for campus landscaping, Farrell and Manhattan libraries and an escort service were also allocated.

The second achievement the city has made is improving campus safety. This was done through its funding of lighting on campus and an escort service.

The campus patrol the city will be funding will be a male and female student who will be able to escort students up to six or seven blocks off campus.

The present residence hall escort service only escorts students on campus and up to a block off campus. This left off-campus students no safe way to walk home.

This new service will increase safety for off-campus students and decrease the load on the residence hall escort service.

These improvements will help the K-State campus, and the city of Manhattan as a whole, become a safer, more attractive and better appointed environment for their residents.

The city and University deserve applause for their collaborative efforts.

Hopefully this will develop into a pattern of mutually beneficial coexistence.

U.S. bullies its way to power

Not many people enjoy talking about news or politics with me. This truly sucks, because I find both to be fascinating and dangerous.

It has taken me many years, but I'm finally able to identify the glazed look people get just before they politely change the subject or agree with me just to shut me up.

I think that people our age need to be thinking about current issues (or at least be aware of them), because events now are shaping the world that we will be trying to survive in. American college students just don't seem to be interested in these things at all.

COLUMN

JASON HAMILTON

You can't hold it against us. We aren't exactly conditioned to think clearly about news by the media, and we aren't conditioned to think about international news at all. Example: The three local papers of any substance (the Topeka, Wichita and Kansas City papers) do almost no international reporting.

In fact, when I was hired for this semester's Collegian, I was advised to keep the subjects of my columns "as close to home as possible" and to try to relate whatever I wrote to issues on campus.

Fortunately, there are no trade wars or ethnic cleansing going on here on campus, but they are going on somewhere. People don't seem to know this or care. I talked to one guy who wasn't even aware that there was a war going on in Europe.

I spent the summer in Europe and was generally amazed at the difference in what gets reported and the attitude the media takes towards what it reports.

According to the European media, the United States is basically the biggest asshole in the world. No other countries can really do anything about it, though, because the United States is also the bully with the biggest fists.

Now, maybe a lot of Americans might think this is a perfectly good state of affairs, I don't know. The problem is that they don't know either. Because of what news gets reported here, and how it gets reported, not many Americans are aware of our country's image abroad.

Once upon a time, in the deepest, darkest depths of the Cold War, the United States proclaimed itself champion of democracy. Americans were the big gun of NATO and the major contributor to the United Nations. We were the leaders in anti-communist propaganda and willing to intervene all over the world to prevent the spread of evil.

Then, in the final days of the Cold War, we shifted our image. Continuing to declare ourselves to be world leaders, now we espoused free and open world markets and a spirit of international cooperation.

All that has changed in the last year, however, leaving our traditional allies in Europe and Asia a little miffed.

Some examples: After much talk about unrestricted and uncoerced trade, we threatened Japan with sanctions if it wouldn't open its automobile markets, nearly starting a trade war.

An agreement was reached, but Japan, with the support of several other U.S. allies, complained to anyone who would listen that the threat of sanctions violated the spirit of free trade that the United States itself continues to be so vocal about.

Later in the summer, Americans pulled out of a major trade agreement that we had been backing from the start, days before it was to be finalized, seriously damaging progress towards global trade agreements. U.S. officials said we needed a couple more years to examine the proposition.

At about the same time, President Clinton ordered the CIA to shift its emphasis toward industrial espionage in order to give U.S. companies an edge in the world market.

Not only did this raise important, as yet unanswered, questions about which U.S. companies get the fruits of the CIA's spying, it also threatens traditional espionage alliances with organizations such as Britain's MI6.

NATO countries and other traditional U.S. allies complained, and U.S. officials basically stated that, in the new world market, the U.S. would be forced to view countries such as France, England, Germany, etc., as economic enemies. So much for the spirit of international cooperation.

Meanwhile, our European allies are less than impressed with our commitment to military cooperation. The vast discrepancy between our behavior in the Kuwait-Iraq dispute and our reaction to the genocidal war in the-country-formerly-known-as-Yugoslavia have shattered whatever remaining delusions they might have had about our attitude toward international cooperation.

We're the only superpower left, unless you count (gulp) China. We've got the most weight, and we're throwing it around. Everybody else has to just back the hell up.

Students beware — Republican regime hazardous to your financial security

Ever since the Republican majority has come into power, students have been under attack.

Numerous bills have been introduced by the Newt Gingrich-led Congress that reduce or eliminate virtually all means of federal student aid. According to U.S. News & World Report, "Every major federal college aid program is considered a target in one form or another by the Republican majority in Congress."

The scope of these cuts is mind-boggling. Six million students nationwide would be affected to a tune of $3,000 a year. Many of the neediest students would be forced out of a college education altogether. The net effect would be to deprive middle- and lower-class students of an education to help pay for a tax cut for the rich.

The latest attack came on Aug. 4 in the HR 2147 Labor HHS appropriations bill. The U.S. House of Representatives eliminated funding for State Student Incentive Grants, National Service Programs and Perkins Loans as well as cutting Pell Grants by $482 million. This comes one day after U.S. Rep. Gerald Solomon (R-NY) had proposed the infamous Student Gag Amendment to the same bill. This attempt to silence the students would have cut off federal funds to any university that used student fees to support any group that tried to affect public policy, was engaged in lobbying or took a political stance. Luckily, the Solomon amendment failed on a vote of 161-263.

All four of our Kansas House members voted for HR 2147. In all fairness, there were other issues on this bill as well. This does not, however, excuse them from the hardships they are trying to impose on students. The only office with any kind of ready reply on this issue was U.S. Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., whose press secretary, Jackie McCalsky, said, "This all goes back to the general idea of cutting the federal government. Student loans took a hit just like everything else."

COLUMN

LACH FRANQUEMONT

Now who could argue with that? I will, for one. "Everything else" does not include any military spending, which is up, and it does not include corporate welfare. These are the two biggest items in the federal budget, and they make all these other programs look like chump change. All of these savings are going down the tubes to pay for a tax cut for the rich, who are already more divided from the poor than in any other industrialized nation.

Our Kansas delegation was divided 2-2 on the Solomon amendment, with Brownback and U.S. Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., voting against it and U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., and U.S. Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan., voting for it. Brownback and Meyers deserve credit for at least not being hypocritical in this instance. Brownback's stance, as reported by McCalsky, was, "With the push now to decrease the size of the federal government, we felt that this went in the wrong direction. The thought is that this issue should be decided at the school level."

Meyers' press secretary, Kirk Walder, agreed, saying, "We felt that the Solomon amendment went too far."

Now, as for our other two wonderful representatives, I don't know where to begin. Tiahrt's press secretary, Matt Schlapp, said, "There's been a lot off talk about student fees being used in ways that the students don't agree with. It was felt that this would give them more choice in the matter."

Choice? More choice to choose when no sponsored club on campus can take a political stance? Goodbye College Republicans and Young Democrats. So long pro-life and pro-choice people. Forget ever hearing any speech on politics on campus. No group, not even Union Program Council or Student Governing Association, could bring in a person with views on any political issue.

Schlapp also said, "The reason behind the amendment seems to be that Jerry Solomon has a couple of kids in college, and they hated to see their student fees go where they didn't want them to."

The buzz around Washington also has it that the real worry was with money going to progressive groups like Ralph Nader's.

What a typical Republican solution. Kill the patient instead of curing the disease. Not that I think money going to progressive groups is bad, but I'm sure they do. You see, the real issue is that when the playing field is leveled, progressives win because they have the better ideas. When the ignorance that fuels the right-wing ideas is exposed it, loses out. One of the few places left where that can happen is on college campuses.

The Republican strategy is finally beginning to come into focus — prevent middle- and lower-income kids from coming to college and competing with their offspring. For those that do slip through the cracks, make sure they have no voice with which to expose the injustice that exists. Soon their dream will come true of a nation where the only wealth belongs to white Christian males.

They have to be stopped, and it's up to us, the college students.

Students utilize CES, Internet in quest for possible employment

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

Career and Employment Services is using the Internet to join the world of employment with student job searches.

"Employment is linked to technology, and CES is the link to the world of employment," Marcia Schuley, assistant director of CES, said.

"Our goal is to link students to this service."

Since CES has been on-line, 50 to 60 employers call each month looking for student employees, Schuley said.

The entire CES staff is trained to assist students on the Internet job-search system, she said.

"It's pretty easy to use," she said.

"You just have to get on and do it," Schuley said.

Students must be registered with CES to use the system.

But getting registered is simple, Schuley said.

The receptionists at Holtz Hall can help you with the registration process.

"Employers may not come to campus, but they are here," Schuley said.

"If you are registered with CES, you have a link to jobs all over the world."

Outside the Internet world, CES can also help with résumés and cover letters during their Résumé Building Workshop.

And if you are nervous about the prospect of interviewing, don't miss Business Mock Interview Day.

All University Career Fair scheduled for Tuesday September 19 is also sponsored by CES.

Several other options for students searching for a job include Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury classifieds and the part-time job board located in the K-State Student Union.

Some part-time student employers welcome walk-in applications.

Sam Haney, manager of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon, has about 50 students working for him.

A lot of students hear of jobs by word of mouth, or they have a friend who works there, he said.

"The face-to-face interaction when a prospective employee turns in the application is very important.

"That's when you can get a pretty good idea of what type of personality they have," Haney said.

Haney also said it is a good idea to check back with prospective employers within least three days.

"The persistent ones are the ones who get hired," Haney said.

About one-third of the crew at McDonalds are students, Geri Purkeypile, manager of the Westloop McDonalds, said.

"I have a hiring banner out right now," Purkeypile said.

"But students can just walk in and fill out an application if they are interested."

Manhattan still looking for new zoo director

Mary Emerson
staff writer

The search is on for a new director for the Sunset Zoological Park.

The position has been vacant since Don Wixom resigned in June to take a job with a tour company.

"What we've done is just begun the process. We've set a Sept. 29 deadline for applications to be turned in," said Terry DeWeese, director of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

There will be an advertisement for the position in the September issue of Communique, a magazine published by the American Zoo and Aquarium Association for all national zoo officials and professionals, DeWeese said.

The city might also advertise the job in newspapers and other magazines to further expand the search.

Another option Parks and Rec has is notifying people who have expressed interest in the position in the past, DeWeese said.

After applications are turned in and evaluated, interviews will begin.

"We're talking about late November by the time we complete the interviewing process," DeWeese said.

"We want to make sure that we did a national search," DeWeese said.

DeWeese has assumed the director position until a new one is chosen.

"I'm in charge right now," DeWeese said. "When we are in these situations, the existing staff all pulls together."

Hundreds of Deadheads say 'goodbye' to Garcia

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Hundreds of followers of the Grateful Dead gathered Saturday in Central Park, dancing and paying tribute to the band's legendary guitarist Jerry Garcia.

Fans swayed to the beat of drums near a makeshift memorial strewn with candles and newspaper clippings.

A sign proclaimed, "In Dreams We Trust."

Police issued some citations for illegal alcohol consumption, but no arrests were made.

Word of the tribute was spread on the Internet computer network. Earlier, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani had rejected plans for a city tribute to Garcia in the park, citing high costs of security and cleanup.

The band's fans, known as Deadheads, came from as far away as Ohio to mourn Garcia, who died Aug. 9 of an apparent heart attack at a substance-abuse clinic in California.

Helen Hoffman and Lil Schuyler of Dayton, Ohio, left home at 9 p.m. Friday with three other friends to be part of the crowd.

"I came just to pay our respects. He inspired me for the last five years," Hoffman said.

Meanwhile, band spokesman Dennis McNalley said Garcia's ashes probably will be scattered at sea off Marin County, Calif., in a private ceremony.

Garcia's body has been cremated, McNalley said Friday.

He said Garcia, who was an avid diver, had expressed wishes for his ashes to be strewn off the Northern California coast.

"I think he just liked talking with the fish," McNally said.

Young backs diversify the offense

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

J.J. Smith, the No. 1 rusher in the history of K-State football, has graduated. So have his backups, Leon Edwards and Rod Schiller. So why is quarterback Matt Miller smiling?

"We've got two fantastic backs," Miller said. "After people see them in a couple of games, they will stop worrying about replacing J.J. Smith. These guys are fantastic."

Sophomores Mike Lawrence and Eric Hickson both are former Florida prep standouts, and together they might significantly change the Wildcat offense. Despite seeing little action in 1994, both were explosive in the spring game.

Lawrence averaged 6.6 yards on 12 rushes last year as a redshirt freshman. But most of his experience was earned as a kickoff returner, where he averaged 25 yards per return. Lawrence gained 117 yards on 21 carries in the spring game.

Hickson, who runs the 40-yard dash in 4.4 seconds, ran for 69 yards on 11 carries in 1994. He led the Cats in rushing yards in the spring game with 132 yards on 30 carries.

Lawrence and Hickson are expected to share the limelight, with Lawrence in the No. 1 spot.

Junior Dederick Kelly will start at fullback when K-State uses a two-back set.

During the Chad May era, the Cats were primarily a passing team, averaging only 125 rushing yards per game. Smith, who ran for 1,073 yards in his senior campaign, usually stood alone in the backfield, with Edwards and Schiller playing only supporting roles.

"I think our running game will be a little different," junior receiver Kevin Lockett said.

"We have Mike and Eric both back there as opposed to J. J. Both of them have different styles, and they're both totally different from J.J.," he said.

With the change in quarterbacks, the running backs will become more important in the Cats' offensive scheme.

"We've got the exact same playbook as we did last year," Miller said, "but we've got the ability to do a lot of other things. It's going to be an exciting offense."

"It will be very hard for a defense to stop our running game," Lockett said. "It adds a lot more depth to our offense."

All you've ever wanted to know, but were afraid to ask about FANTASY FOOTBALL

Quick — name one of the fastest-growing sports in America. No, its not hockey, tennis, golf or even roller derby. It's fantasy football.

During the past four years, fantasy football participation has grown to an estimated 3 to 4 million players. This growth is largely due to the increase in popularity of the National Football League. With the recent players' strikes, more fans have turned to football and now fantasy football.

But there are some people who have not heard of fantasy football. For those fans, the questions that come to mind are: "What is fantasy football? How do you play?"

First of all, fantasy football is not some fantasy you have about playing football. Nor is it an island where you go to play football where a short man says, "The plane, the plane."

"Fantasy football can give you the chance to be like the big-time NFL owners."

Fantasy football is a game in which people are given the chance to own and coach their own NFL team. It starts with a pro-like draft in which owners draft usually 16 to 17 players at various "scoring" positions (quarterbacks, running backs, receivers, tight ends and kickers). Each owner then drafts a lineup consisting of one quarterback, two running backs, two receivers, one tight end and one kicker.

COLUMN

SHANE McCORMICK

Teams compete against other league teams each week. Game outcomes are determined by adding together the points actually scored by your players during their regular NFL games.

For example, if you have Barry Sanders on your team and he scores two touchdowns, then you receive 12 points (six points for each touchdown). The fantasy team with the most points wins.

Just like in the NFL, the team with the best divisional records in your league at the end of a regular season goes to the playoffs. Usually a two-week playoff occurs, with the fantasy league Super Bowl occurring during the final week of the NFL season. Because a player's scoring potential depends on his actually playing, this ensures that all NFL players are still eligible for the fantasy Championship.

Fantasy football can give you the chance to be like the big-time NFL owners. During the draft, you decide whom you want to pull the trigger. During the regular season, if you have a player who is not scoring, you can try to trade him. You as a fantasy owner have to make the right decisions — decisions that will lead your team to the coveted fantasy football league championship.

So grab six or more people to form a league and start planning your draft strategy for selecting a winning team. Prove to everyone that you too could be the next Jerry Jones, Lamar Hunt or even Al Davis.

For those of you planning to participate in a fantasy football league this year, here is my top-10 list of choices for draft day:

10. Herman Moore (wide receiver- Detroit Lions)
9. Chris Warren (running back- Seattle Seahawks)
8. Barry Sanders (running back- Detroit Lions)
7. Drew Bledsoe (quarterback- New England Patriots)
6. Natrone Means (running back- San Diego Chargers)
5. Dan Marino (quarterback- Miami Dolphins)
4. Marshall Faulk (running back- Indianapolis Colts)
3. Jerry Rice (wide receiver- San Francisco 49ers)
2. Steve Young (quarterback- San Francisco 49ers)
1. Emmitt Smith (running back- Dallas Cowboys)

Overlooked K-State club sports look for respect and possibly a move to varsity stature

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

When the football team plays in back-to-back bowl games, it's easy to forget the more-than 500 Kansas State students who participate in club sports every year.

K-State has 22 registered sports clubs, with both men and women competing in everything from soccer to fencing to ultimate frisbee. Most clubs have a primary season, using the off-season to prepare and keep in shape.

"We will try to schedule a couple games in the fall, with the bulk of the season in the spring," said Stephanie Wesemann, junior in architectural engineering and president of the women's lacrosse team.

"It's hard because women's lacrosse is really new in the Midwest. Our closest game will probably be in Nebraska, and most of our opponents will come from Texas."

Other sports participate in national championships.

"Volleyball, table tennis, rodeo, crew, and men's and women's rugby all compete at national club sports club championships," said Curt Thurman, sports club director for the athletic department.

"Rugby has a select team, the Eagles, and a lot of our people in the past have been chosen to compete for the Eagles."

The K-State table tennis club, in addition to competing for the women's singles for the second straight year, propelling the Region 11 team to the championship.

While some sports clubs charge dues for equipment, most are supported by the athletic department privilege fee.

Eight percent of revenues from the athletic fee, and approximately $46,000-50,000, goes to support sports club competition.

Though Thurman and the athletic department coordinate sports club activities, many of them are not what you would think of as college sports.

"Parachute club is different because they take people in and train them, but only the instructors compete," Thurman said. "Parachute competes in a national championship, and rock climbing will start competing this year, with tactical climbing and different levels of difficulty."

Rodeo, another nontraditional sport, is one of the most popular sports clubs at K-State.

The club has about 70 active members, with 30 to 35 competing on a regular basis.

In addition to hosting a rodeo in the spring, the club will sponsor a Bull-o-rama Nov. 11.

"We'll bring in 40-top riders from around the country and 40 bulls," Steve Frazier, rodeo club's adviser, said.

"The top 10 will get to ride again in the finals."

Women's rowing will start varsity competition in 1996, and other sports clubs could be promoted to varsity status in the future.

Thurman said clubs have often served as stepping stones to the varsity competition level.

"Varsity players used to come from club sports," Thurman said. "Just like women's crew, the sports clubs were a starting point for varsity sports."

Chiefs fans enjoying Hughes' early success

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It's a phrase Kansas City Chiefs fans are getting to know: Touchdown, Danan Hughes.

With the Chiefs rich in receivers, Hughes said he hopes his record in this preseason — a touchdown in each of the three games — has earned him a spot on the roster and a bigger role than he had the past two seasons on special teams.

"It's kind of tough to move up when you're doing things right, but everyone else is doing this right also," Hughes said after Saturday night's 36-10 victory against Buffalo.

"I'm just trying to open some eyes, and if they're open now, I want them open a little more."

Hughes' eye-catching reception Saturday took place in the end zone.

As quarterback Steve Bono encountered a pass rush, Hughes raced into the left back corner. Bono searched for a receiver while rolling right, and Hughes again played it as planned, cruising along the back line of the end zone to the opposite corner — where Bono found him with a 13-yard touchdown pass.

Once again, Hughes had made the most of an opportunity by knowing the play and running it precisely.

"Oftentimes, it's not the most talented guy who ends up being the best player," receiving coach Al Saunders said. "A lot of times, it's the individual who does things correctly. Danan does a lot of things correctly."

That reputation can only help the Chiefs decide where Hughes fits while all those other receivers — Willie Davis, Lake Dawson, the newly signed Webster Slaughter and former Philadelphia Eagle Victor Bailey — are around.

A 1993 seventh-round pick out of Iowa, Hughes played in all 16 games last season. He had seven receptions for 80 yards, nine kickoff returns for an average 21.1 yards and a team-high 27 punt returns at a 7.1-yard average.

The Chiefs left him unprotected last winter in the expansion draft but pulled him back when two of their other players were picked.

Hughes nearly asked to be moved to safety when he saw the Chiefs building up the receiver corps during the off-season. But he remained hopeful of snagging a wide receiver berth and benefited in training camp — his first without injury — from injuries to others.

In the preseason opener Aug. 5 against Washington, Hughes scored his first touchdown on a fluke, catching the football as it caromed off teammate Tracy Greene's hands in the end zone.

Against Arizona on Aug. 11, Hughes was Bono's third option on a pass play. But because Hughes ran the route precisely, Bono turned to him and threw a 4-yard scoring pass.

Now Hughes is finding that a few months make a lot of difference.

"I guess I got caught in the crossfire around here a little bit," Hughes said. "The last couple of years, I spent a lot of the preseason and a lot of training camp thinking about what the receivers were doing. I don't have any control over that, so I just decided this year not to even think about it.

"You can go one of two ways. You can get down on yourself and go down, or you can have some confidence and go up. So far, I've been going up."

UNION

up," she said.

John Havlin, president of Faculty Senate, said unionizing was the wrong way to approach problems.

"If they feel they should have a voice, they should organize, not unionize," Havlin said.

Reid said the University of Kansas formed a union for GTAs to combat unfair labor practices several years ago and received opposition from faculty.

"When KU unionized, the faculty came out against it, and there was a two-year lawsuit," Murphy said.

At K-State, the best way for the GTAs to accomplish their goals is not to battle the school, but to bring it before faculty members and get their favor, Havlin said.

He said Senate and SGA could meet with the group and discuss issues.

"Everyone listens to the SGA — the faculty, the Board of Regents — it's because they are very organized," Havlin said.

Havlin said he was president of an organization for graduate students and helped it receive approval for a motion which said that any salary increase given to the faculty would also be given to the GTAs.

GTAs' payment is different in each department. The 40-hour work week is divided into tenths, and the time investment expected of the GTA is given as a fraction. One tenth is worth a different amount in each department.

Within Reid's department, the GTAs are denied a cost-of-living increase in their pay, he said.

"We are treated like expendable employees," he said.

Reid said in his experience in the sociology department, the workload, which includes teaching about 180 students for three hours a week, holding office hours and testing often exceeds the four-tenths time allotment that he is paid for.

harder to find that extra nickel," Jill Graham, sophomore in psychology, said.

Graham buys most of her soda between classes and said her drinking habits probably won't change.

Wisdom said vending services hasn't dealt with many complaints over the new price.

"I expect to hear more now," he said.

It could be worse, Wisdom said.

Vending services considered a 10-cent raise in the price, which would have taken the price to 60 cents.

"To me, that would have been a 20-percent price increase, and that's hard to justify," he said.

Jenika Hlasney, junior in accounting and student secretary in Anderson Hall, said she brings her pop to work everyday anyway.

Hlasney said pop prices are already too expensive on campus.

"All other pop at grocery stores is either 35 or 40 cents," she said.

"If I'm desperate, I'll go to the Union," Hlasney said.

▶ SPACE SHUTTLE

NASA to focus on research

■ Private contractors will be given operations of space shuttles

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA expects to hand over operations of its space shuttles to a single business within a few years in an attempt to reduce costs and increase responsibility.

"We have a safe program. We have checks and balances," NASA's space flight chief Wayne Littles told industry officials Monday.

"But we don't have as much focus, the accountability, as we would like to have, and we're going to achieve that as we move into this restructuring."

NASA's four shuttles will be even safer once a single contractor takes over the $3 billion-a-year program and the space agency focuses more on research and development, Littles said.

Littles insisted it will be a "wide-open" competition even though shuttle-contracting giants Lockheed Martin and Rockwell International already have joined forces to compete for the prime job. Their newly formed venture is called United Space Alliance.

NASA expects to choose a single contractor within a year or so.

All this is inevitable because of the sweeping cutbacks at the space agency over the past few years, particularly in the shuttle program, officials said. A panel of space and aviation experts recommended in March that NASA consolidate shuttle operations under a single business.

"We've done all we can reasonably do within the current set of requirements and structure to gain efficiencies, and now it's time to take that next step," Littles said.

Litties declined to say how much money would be saved, and jobs lost, by compressing NASA's sprawling shuttle program from the current 85 contracts involving 56 companies into a single contract involving one prime organization.

The shuttle program currently employs 22,500 people nationwide — 19,700 contractor employees and 2,800 civil service employees.

Because of the government's reduced duties, only about half of those 2,800 civil service workers probably would be needed by the year 2000, said shuttle director Bryan O'Connor.

Littles would not specify when a shuttle might fly under the auspices of a single prime contractor, except to say it would occur sometime within three or so years. He promised there would be no disruption of the flight schedule and that safety would remain "first and foremost" in everyone's minds.

The next few years are crucial for NASA's shuttle program. Atlantis is supposed to dock six more times with the Russian space station Mir, then three shuttles are to start hauling up parts of the international space station.

NASA would retain key functions under the proposed consolidation: resolving and assessing shuttle problems, choosing astronauts, directing launches.

There still are many unknowns.

No one knows how many NASA employees will be in the launch control center on launch day, for instance, once a single prime contractor takes over. It's also difficult to say if or when the shuttle program might become a commercial enterprise.

"If there is a market, if there's opportunity, if there is interest by industry, then the program may with time move to ... where the contractor either owns the resources and facilities or parts of them and uses those facilities and resources as a business venture to make money," Littles said.

added to the service in September 1996, Wildcat Walk will have had a chance to work out all the kinks in its system, Finkeldei said.

"Residence halls will still be used during peak hours," he said.

He said he hopes the number of available escorts in the residence halls would increase when the walking patrol take over the early-morning escorts.

"Hopefully, we'll get the residence hall numbers up because they will only have to work from 8 p.m. to midnight or 1 a.m.," he said.

Money to continue the project will be taken from the general-use fund. The fund is used for salaries for student employees and is granted a 3-percent cost-of-living increase each year, Finkeldei said.

The operation costs for the walking patrols will come from the 3-percent increase.

"It's the base amount that will be available to run the project in the future," Finkeldei said.

BUDGET

commissioners, referring to the absence of Commissioner Sydney Carlin, who was moving her son to college.

"It's unfortunate that at such a critical condition we only had four of the five commissioners, but family is more important," Kastner said.

The budget finally passed with a 3-1 vote. Hall cast the dissenting vote because the budget still included $5.7 million for the business park.

The 1996 budget also includes an economic development fund, which is dispersed to applicants whom the board approves.

Projects that were allocated money from the fund include a storm-water management fund, funding for a proposed business park and funds for a fuel farm at the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

A big chunk of the budget is allocated to the public works department for street, sewer and water improvements.

'Dangerous Minds' retreads old ground

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

See Michelle Pfeiffer ruffle through her hair in the hallway.

See Michelle Pfeiffer sigh in disbelief of her students.

See Michelle Pfeiffer wear trendy, urban-inspired outfits.

Don't see "Dangerous Minds," Pfeiffer's new ultra-dramatic, all-too-socially important movie.

If you've seen the previews or the countless airings of Coolio's "Gangsta's Paradise" video, you probably know more about the movie than most people who have seen it.

The paper-thin plot and character developments are the stuff of after-school specials, and to see Pfeiffer struggle, albeit gracefully, through this movie is discomforting at times.

The actress who romanced us in "The Age of Innocence" and wooed us in "Batman Returns" is definitely misused in this predictable career move.

"Dangerous Minds'" biggest problem is the movie has been made before. It's even been made better.

It's the typical story of the naive teacher who takes on a group of unruly students who, through the course of the movie, begin to understand learning is important, their teacher is the top, and drugs and alcohol are no good. "Dangerous Minds" is just a "Stand and Deliver" for the hip-hop set.

The themes of understanding, the worth of knowledge, and, especially, the appreciation of others' differences, are themes which are endlessly recycled in movies. So, why do we go to these movies even though every one of them is as predictable as the last?

Why is "Private Benjamin" as funny now as it was in the early 1980s? We know Goldie Hawn is going to be a success, so why do we sit through the entire movie?

Because we enjoy people overcoming odds. It's a time-tested, American tradition. "We shall overcome."

No one in America would ever work again if they didn't know, in the back of their minds, that by working today their tomorrow would be brighter.

So, this brings us back to "Dangerous Minds," which utilizes these traditional, grand themes but slaps the audience in the face with superficial stereotyping.

Since Pfeiffer's students are inner-city kids, supposedly mistreated by the system, we're to believe this makes Pfeiffer's job that much harder (Don't start crying, yet).

But, just to make this stale story a bit fresher, we're offered the prospect that because Pfeiffer is an ex-Marine, her way of doing things will be quite different than the typical teacher.

Don't forget to throw in the apathetic administrators (So inconceivable!), the select few actual gifted students in her class, the mandatory one or two major obstacles, and the one indifferent student who makes her life hell. You can't have a stereotypical tale of triumph without the key players.

After all this is said and done, what are we to think of Pfeiffer? You could think "Dangerous Minds" is her way of saying, "Hey, I'm not just a pretty face. I can do dirty work, too."

Hollywood is marketing after all.

We can forgive Pfeiffer. She could be our best actress.

More realistically, Pfeiffer just enjoyed the script. Based on a real memoir by ex-Marine and teacher Lou Ann Johnson, the story is quite inspiring and made a big buzz in La-La land.

As a movie, it just doesn't deliver.

Time to call the decorator?

You've got all your stuff moved in, but the place is lacking that certain ... atmosphere. What can you do on a limited budget? More than you think.

stories by lisa elliott • design by stephanie fuqua • art by cart conover

So you've moved in.

But your stuff is threatening to crowd you out of your residence hall room, or your apartment needs some pizzaz — on the cheap.

Decorating and space management can be done on a student's budget.

Claudia Jones, interior designer at Crown Decorating Center, said a good way to start is repeat a color several times throughout a room to create a color scheme.

A pillow the same color as the curtains or a fabric swag with the colors from the room in it can really tie a room together, she said.

Another cheap way to decorate is with paint.

"Paint is the least expensive way to get color," Jones said.

A faux finish, adding or subtracting paint, can brighten a room. Sponging, marbleizing and rag rolling are popular methods of producing a faux finish.

Many times, paint stores will have mis-tints, Jones said. Mis-tints are cans of paint ordered which were not the right color.

"Most stores will end up with a lot of neutral colors," she said.

Because the paint is a mis-tint, the store will often sell it at a greatly reduced price.

"It's a great deal," she said.

If painting is not an option, a tenant may try wall paper, but good preparation is the key, she said.

"If the wall is prepared correctly, the paper will stay up longer and come down better," Jones said.

Often, expense can be avoided by consulting friends and trading labor, Jones said. If a friend does not like to paint, but likes to wall paper, a deal may be worked out.

"Two or three spools of border make a dramatic difference in a room," Jones said.

For those who can't wall paper or paint, draping fabric on a wall can also be used to add color.

A student may also decide to have a favorite poster framed to hang.

"It gives you a more finished look and protects the poster," Jones said.

Adding a personal touch can make an apartment or room look like a home.

"The most important thing is to put out the effort to stick plants and put a few pictures up," Susie Baxter, owner of Design Details, said.

"It makes it more personal, especially if you can't paint."

When it comes to managing space, versatility is the key, Claudia Jones, interior designer at Crown Decorating, said.

"Think about how you need to use the space," she said.

The first thing to do is figure out how accessible the storage needs to be.

Susie Baxter, owner of Design Details, said she suggested purchasing a desk with drawers and using chests or trunks instead of tables for TV stands and coffee tables.

Baskets can also be a good place to store things, and they can look decorative as well, she said.

"While money is a concern, cheap is not always best," Jones said.

More expensive shelving will last longer than plastic crates and will keep expenses down in the future.

Discount stores, garage sales and auctions are all good places to look for space-saving furniture, Jones said.

An adaptable system is usually the best space saver, but it can be more expensive, she said.

Many residence halls look more like construction zones than a home.

Residents often build lofts that lift their beds off the floor. The extra room is used for desks or storage.

Hang Nguyen, junior in public relations, said she liked her room better since her roommate put up their loft.

"My room was really bland before," Nguyen said.

Nguyen lived in the same room in Moore last year, but she did not have a loft.

"We didn't really think much about the loft until people started asking us about it," she said.

"Everybody stops and peeks in our room."

In Moore, the bedsprings are on boxes which have drawers for storage under them. Most people who build lofts stack the boxes on top of each other for the second bed.

Lisa Kay Blume, junior in women's studies, said she built her roommate's loft her freshman year, but she bought someone else's loft for herself last year.

"When you're building a loft, it's very important to get as many helpers together as you can," she said.

Once you have help lined up and an idea of what you want for your loft, the next step is to go to the lumber yard.

"You don't have to measure before you go to the lumber yard, but you do need an idea of what you want to build," Blume said.

She said she used 3/4 inch plywood for the platform and long 4x4s for the supports and frame.

"The first thing you need to do then is put the platform together," she said.

Once the platform has been assembled, it is time to call on some of those volunteers to help hold it so the legs can be bolted to the platform, Blume said.

"Make sure the screws are flush with the outside of the loft, because if they are in the wrong way, they can make holes in the walls," she said.

Once the loft has legs, it can be raised. The stabilizing braces should be attached before the volunteers leave the room.

Braces for the legs should be made from 2x4s. They also make great steps for the ladder, Blume said. The railings for the ladders should be made of 2x6s.

Residence hall also rules require a height limit on lofts.

"Lofts can't be taller than 70 inches at the top of the mattress," Blume said. "The platform cannot exceed 8 feet by 4 feet."

"Some students put glow-in-the-dark solar systems on their ceilings."

NIKKI THOMPSON, SENIOR IN ANIMAL SCIENCES AND INDUSTRY AND RESIDENT ASSISTANT IN GOODNOW HALL

Internet access available to Manhattan businesses

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Access to the Internet is becoming easier for computer users in Manhattan.

Besides the Internet access provided to students, staff and faculty at the University, local businesses have begun to offer access to those not affiliated with the University or to those who want an alternative to the University's network.

One business that has been providing some Internet access to local businesses is MegaMedia Inc. of Manhattan.

About 24 local businesses and agencies have pages on the World Wide Web through MegaMedia, said Vanessa Ault McCoy, marketing and promotions director for MegaMedia.

MegaMedia provides businesses with pages on the Web to inform and advertise to the local on-line community.

The most successful advertising on the Web has been for restaurants, McCoy said.

"From the food aspect, it's been great," McCoy said about local responses to businesses' Web pages.

MegaMedia restaurant pages offer on-line ordering, coupons and on-line menus, McCoy said.

"Aggieville Pizza gets about two to three orders a day from their Web page during the regular school year," McCoy said.

"I suspect Pizza Shuttle has been getting one or two orders a day."

McCoy said an on-line coupon campaign for Vista Restaurants was so popular, it had to be discontinued.

MegaMedia is looking forward to developing a page for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce soon as well as more general information on Manhattan and Junction City, McCoy said.

MegaMedia doesn't plan to expand to offer e-mail or other Internet services in the near future, she said.

"We're pretty small and spread pretty thin, so we're not planning to change much just yet," McCoy said.

Dennis Haza has been offering Internet access through his company, Flint Hills Computers, to businesses and individuals since March.

Haza said his firm provides high-speed connections, Web access, custom domains and advertising to businesses.

Flint Hills Computing also offers 90 minutes a day of free Internet access to individuals as well, Haza said.

These free services include the use of Netscape, ftp, telenet and limited use of e-mail.

Haza has been caught in the dilemma created by the content of some newsgroups on the part of the Internet called Usenet.

He said he doesn't want the legal liability of being a censor, which would make him responsible for all the content of the newsgroups, but is uncomfortable offering some of the newsgroups.

"Some of them I don't want on my system," he said.

"What are you going to do? It's a real problem."

Haza said pending litigation against those providers who don't censor newsgroups has convinced him to wait until the controversies involved become settled.

"I'm going to let the law shake it out," he said.

Haza said providing Internet access is secondary to his other business at Flint Hills Computers, so he doesn't use pressure to sell access to businesses.

"We don't beat up on people to get them to sign up," he said. "We're more down-to-Earth."

The most recent addition to the Manhattan on-line but off-campus community has been Fox Business Systems.

The firm began offering Internet access in July, Jim Lund, Fox Business Systems owner, said.

Like Flint Hills Computers, Fox offers connections up to the speed of T1, which is about 1.5 megabytes per second, Lund said.

"We brought T1 access to Manhattan because we knew 56K wouldn't be enough," he said. "It makes it faster in a lot of different ways."

Besides providing Web access to businesses, Fox Business Systems sells personal accounts to individuals.

These accounts include access to the Web, Lynx, Usenet, ftp and IRC.

Lund sees his business as an alternative to the K-State community.

"Although there are 9,000 students (on-line) at K-State, there are only 135 lines," Lund said, referring to the amount of dial-up lines that can be accessed from users outside the campus computer labs.

"From word of mouth, we're doing great," Lund said of the response his business has received.

"If things keep up like this, I'll be happy."

Politicians could learn from message of 'The Dead'

"Goddamn, well I declare — have you seen the light?
Their walls are built of cannon balls,
their motto is 'Don't tread on me'..."
'Uncle John's Band,' The Grateful Dead

Many people have an opinion on what The Grateful Dead means to them. I am not here to say mine is better. I just want to say that the music of The Grateful Dead can be inspirational.

Many years ago, I was a patriotic American pig, blindly following my country because I thought it was the only way of life. And when the Gulf "War" began in 1990, I wanted a piece of the glory that was lost in Vietnam.

"You know, if the President wants to go shred the Iraqi military into hamburger to ensure that hundreds of defenseless oil wells continue pumping sweet gasoline into my '86 Pontiac, that's fine by me," I thought.

It wasn't until later I found the "Iraqi aggressors" were mostly frightened conscripts, most hoping to bring some money for food to their wives and children at home. They were human, on a basic level, like you or me.

This common element of humanity is what characterizes the music of The Grateful Dead. Very few of the band's songs were ever written about sappy love. Instead, most just make typical the hard luck of common people.

I realize this is simplifying the issue significantly. I will not pretend to provide a treatise on The Grateful Dead in 15 column inches.

If I did it poorly, I could certainly expect to wake up in the morning with hundreds of "Dead Heads" outside my window, hurling bricks at my car.

Then they'd break into my house, and some long-haired guy with a tie-dyed t-shirt would grab me in a choke hold and say "Look, man … I'm not really into violence, but I'm really gonna smash your face in, man!"

I can't picture that. Because I have listened to the music. I smoked pot, and I inhaled with "Dead Heads." But most importantly of all, I have seen the love in their eyes.

I'm not implying that the whole world should be forced to listen to The Grateful Dead in elementary school. But if we all took heed of the message, if we all acknowledged our common, fragile humanity, we could change the world.

Maybe we should take this issue to Washington. Yes, that's it. Lock all the generals, staff members and congressmen in a room, somewhere in the west wing of the White House. Oh, and shove Bill in there, too.

Then light twenty kilos of pot in the fireplace, shut the fluke, and pipe in The Grateful Dead.

I wonder what would ensue? I could almost see the maids gathered at the door. Five minutes later, a burst of giggles from inside. Through a smoky haze, Gingrich scoots his chair next to Clinton's.

Newt: "Hey, Bill, man … sorry about that whole 'counter-culture' thing, man."

Bill: "You know, partisan politics are a bunch of shit. Let's just do what's best for the people, man. Cut the defense budget."

Although this scenario is next to impossible, it is entertaining. This one's for you, Jerry. I'll miss you.

Congressional aides tour regional farms

Katie Thomas
staff reporter

State congressional aides visited K-State Aug. 14-16 for the annual Kansas Tour, which is sponsored by the College of Agriculture.

"We invite congressional aides involved in agriculture to K-State for an on- and off-campus tour," David Mugler, associate dean of agriculture, said.

Each year, the tour focuses on different areas in Kansas during an off-campus tour and learning about different issues during an on-campus tour, said Richard Wootton, associate director, cooperative extension service.

Aides traveled to southwestern Kansas and visited a large dairy farm, discussed water issues, toured a feedlot and met with extension agents during their off-campus tour.

"Being from Johnson County, it was good to see regional agriculture where farms are double the size they are in northeast Kansas," said Keith Yahle, legislative assistant for Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan.

The on-campus visit included several discussion groups, which reviewed grain- and food-science developments, food safety and economic developments, and value-added outreach.

Yahle said the discussion on food safety was the most beneficial because it is an issue of debate on Capitol Hill.

"It is important to stay on top of the research done by K-State," said Jackie McClaskey, agricultural policy coordinator for Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

Information gathered through K-State research is important and will help the aides be better informed, Wootton said.

"K-State has the experts, and that's important," Yahle said.

It was interesting to learn the benefits of the relationship among teaching, research and extension that K-State has to offer as a land-grant university, she said. The extension service is a link between K-State and people in Kansas.

"Overall, the entire tour was very beneficial for all of us. Even as a graduate from the College of Agriculture, there were a lot of aspects I was unfamiliar with," McClaskey said. McClaskey, who graduated from K-State in 1993, was an active student in the College of Agriculture.

During the tour, other aides were John Hixson who represented Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and Dave Hanna and Matt Schlapp, who represented Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan.

"For the aides to be effective in their job advising the legislatures, they need to get some exposure to real-world agriculture," Wootton said.

Grither's latest release not quite 'All Smiles'

Aaron Brungardt
staff writer

The latest sounds from Kansas City roared through my stereo as I attempted to concentrate on Grither's EP, "All Smiles." Believe me, it didn't take much to focus my thoughts.

Mike Allmayer, vocalist and guitarist, and bass guitarist/background vocalist Mark Reynolds created the band and named it after a creature from "Tales From the Darkside."

A year later, in summer 1994, drummer Tim Mohn landed a spot within the band's madness, which is where the trio stands today.

Allmayer's voice rings frantically within all five of Grither's tunes. It reminded me a little of Kurt Cobain. However, Allmayer doesn't stop there.

He can also play rhythm guitar well enough to put him in the spotlight in songs like "Trickle Down Justice" and the album's finale, "Insomnia."

Reynolds is able to blend well with Allmayer in "One Piece Missing" to create a surprising vocal track.

Reynolds also shows that his ability on the bass was OK, but nothing much more than that. It isn't anything new or outstandingly original.

The repetitive percussion of Mohn; however, does not do well with the faster pace of the guitars. Mohn's tempo is a bit slow compared to the other instruments in "Repetitive Song of Joy," for example.

Produced by Ted Nicely and John Agnello, (producer of Dinosaur Jr. and Screaming Trees), Grither's "All Smiles" has good separation, tight mixing, and is a job well done.

Grither is exuberant as far as vocals are concerned, but its percussion is a little slow and perhaps the guitars should simmer down to the pace of Mohn.

Grither sounds like much of today's radio music, or a fad created by MTV.

I believe all artists need to find ways to be different from other artists in order to give the audience a new experience.

Grither has failed to do just that.

However, if the modern fad tickles your butt, a full LP by Grither is expected in early 1996, and several singles are to be released late in the year.

Ecumenical Campus Ministry opening doors to students

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

Ecumenical Campus Ministry opened its doors Monday night like it does every day, but this time its mission was to talk about the center.

The open house Monday night was to tell students ECM is not really churchy or religious, but instead it is for students to be themselves and have fun, Al Zimmerman, director of ECM, said. "We accept anyone and don't worry where they're coming from," he said. "Basically, we're here to serve the students with any needs."

Ten to 15 people showed up for the open house. Some of the people were there for the first time, while others had been to the center before.

Mark Ahmadi, senior in electrical engineering, said his roommate got him involved at the ECM center last year.

"It's a good place to meet other people without having to talk religion," he said.

The ECM center is a place where you can be yourself and have fun at the same time, Ahmadi said.

Jason Orme, sophomore in accounting, said he has only been to the ECM center to play table tennis, but a friend talked him into going to open house.

"I've heard that they discuss a lot of social issues, and I would like to take part in it," he said.

COMING EVENTS

▶ Friday, Aug. 25 – free movie at 9:30 p.m.
Sunday, Aug. 27 – supper for a $1 donation, but no one will be turned away

The ECM center, which is located at 1021 Denison Ave., has a pool table, ping-pong table, a large recreation area, TV room, meeting room, kitchen and a small library.

Groups can rent out the center for large functions; otherwise, the building is open for people to come and go as they please, Zimmerman said.

Throughout the school year ECM sponsors free movie showings on Fridays, Sunday suppers and intramural team sports.

ECM is an interdenominational center, but it mainly represents the Presbyterians and the United Church of Christ, Zimmerman said.

Zimmerman said ECM is an informal group of people and always open for newcomers.

"When people come, they almost always like it," he said. "Religion often gets a bad name. We try to show religion can be fun."

Commuter plane crashes

Associated Press

CARROLLTON, Ga. — A commuter plane flying from Georgia to Mississippi crashed in a hay field and cracked open Monday, killing the pilot and two others and injuring 26, many of whom fled the wreckage with their clothes on fire.

"I thought I was going to die, and I was just hoping it was going to end real quick," a passenger, Chuck Pfisterer, told Atlanta television station WSB.

"And the next thing I knew, after sustaining bumps and bruises, I opened my eyes and saw that, hey, I'm alive, and the plane is in pieces and I'm hanging by my seat belt."

The Atlantic Southeast Airlines turboprop went down around midday about five miles from Carrollton, breaking into three large pieces as it plowed across the green field.

The pilot had radioed that he was having engine problems, and he may have been trying to land at West Georgia Regional Airport, six to eight miles from the crash site, said Christy Williams, a Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman.

But a passenger, Air Force Maj. Chuck LeMay, told WSB that, after passengers heard a loud bang, they were told the plane would try to return to Atlanta for an emergency landing.

Polona Jeter, who lives nearby, said she saw the front of the plane rolling, tumbling and on fire as the aircraft came apart.

"I could see about 10 people getting out," she said. "Some were burning. They were running. People were trying to get them down and get it out."

One injured man arrived on her front porch and used the phone to leave a message for his wife in Maine.

"His clothes were burned off. His undershorts were all that was left," she said. "The skin just rolled off his body."

The pilot and a passenger were dead at the scene, the FAA said. Atlanta Southeast Airlines President John Beiser said the pilot was from Macon, Ga., but would not release his name. The passenger who died at the scene was not immediately identified.

Another passenger died later at Erlanger Medical Center in Chattanooga, Tenn., hospital spokeswoman Carolyn Peak told WTVC-TV.

Peak identified the victim as Lucille Burton of Asheville, N.C., whose age was not immediately known.

The 26 survivors were all hospitalized. At least 10 were in critical condition with burns.

The plane left a scarred path in the field indicating it barely cleared trees before hitting the ground.

"We were all lucky to get out of that," LeMay said. "There were some people who came out of the aircraft that were sitting behind where I was at. As they came out, they were on fire. People were telling them to roll, you know, on the ground."

The two-engine Brazilian-made Embraer 120 was about 15 minutes and 50 miles into a flight from Atlanta to Gulfport, Miss., a popular gambling resort 362 miles away. It had 26 passengers and three crew members. The weather was cloudy and rainy.

The cause of the crash was under investigation. In Washington, the National Transportation Safety Board assembled a team to investigate.

The company passed an extensive FAA inspection in May, Beiser said. "We run a safe airline and will continue to do so," he said.

It was the third fatal commuter plane crash in 10 months. Another Atlantic Southeast Embraer 120 crashed in 1991, killing former Sen. John Tower and 22 others in Brunswick.

The Atlanta-based Atlantic Southeast passed an extensive FAA inspection in May, Beiser said. "We run a safe airline and will continue to do so," he said.

Paul Butler, who lives about 75 yards from the crash site, said he rushed out of his house when he heard two loud booms and saw the plane skidding to a stop.

"People were already out, some on fire, going in every direction," Butler said.

He watched as others emerged through a gaping hole in the aircraft. Everyone he saw was burned, Butler said,. Some had no clothes on.

The pilot or copilot was trapped in the cockpit, and Butler said firefighters used axes from his barn to rescue him.

"One of the firemen chopped the glass out of the cockpit and they turned the firehose on him and chopped the glass till they could get him out," Butler said.

On Oct. 31, a French-made ATR turboprop commuter plane crashed in Indiana, killing all 68 aboard.

On Dec. 13, a British-made Jetstream crashed in fog and drizzle in North Carolina. Fifteen of the 20 people aboard were killed.

Woman chased, killed; crowd watches, cheers

Associated Press

DETROIT — Three men pulled a woman from her car, ripped off her clothes, then chased her until she either jumped or was forced off a bridge to her death as dozens of onlookers gathered, and some cheered.

None of the 40 or so passersby tried to help Deletha Word during the confrontation that began with two minor traffic accidents early Saturday on Belle Isle, Sgt. John Morel said.

A man who arrived late tried to rescue her from the Detroit River but couldn't reach her. The 33-year-old woman's body, missing a leg, was found several miles downstream later that morning.

"My baby was down there all by herself. I know she was scared to death," the woman's mother, Dortha Word, said as she cried Monday. "How could they be so cruel?"

Trouble started around 3 a.m., Morel said, when Word was involved in two minor traffic accidents on Belle Island. One car with three men inside chased her onto the bridge connecting the island to the city and rammed her car, forcing her to stop.

One of the men smashed her car with a crowbar and pulled her from the car, ripping off some of her clothes, Cmdr. Gerald Stewart said.

The man pushed her against the car and beat her, he said.

One of the men weighed nearly 300 pounds, according to a police source quoted in the Detroit News.

Word, who was 4-foot-11, weighed 115 pounds, her mother said.

When Word tried to run away, police said the man with the crowbar chased her. What happened after that is unclear.

Police are not saying whether Word jumped or was forced off the bridge, but Mrs. Word said she is sure her daughter was forced into the Detroit River.

"They made her leap over that bridge and beat her hands. She was holding onto the bridge and beat her hands away from that banister," she said, citing an account she said police gave her.

Word's cousin Carol Neely said Word would have never jumped because she did not know how to swim.

Lawrence Walker, 21, was in the bumper-to-bumper traffic that had formed on the bridge when he noticed a crowd running to the edge.

He got out of his car and followed, jumping into the river after her.

"I wasn't trying to be Superman or anything," he said.

"I just saw something and jumped in without thinking about it."

But Word moved away from him and a friend in the water, and he quickly lost sight of her. He worried afterward that perhaps she thought he was one of the people after her.

"I think my trying to help her maybe made her swim a little further out than she could," he said.

Walker said about 50 people were gathered when he ran up, many of them laughing about the men beating Word.

He said one person had a cellular phone but would not call the police.

"It seemed like people didn't care," he said.

By Sunday afternoon, police had arrested three men, two age 20 and one age 19.

It was not clear what charges they faced.

Relatives described Word, who had a 13-year-old daughter as the backbone of their close-knit family.

Soldiers force refugees home

■ 10,000 Rwandans
expelled from Zaire

Associated Press

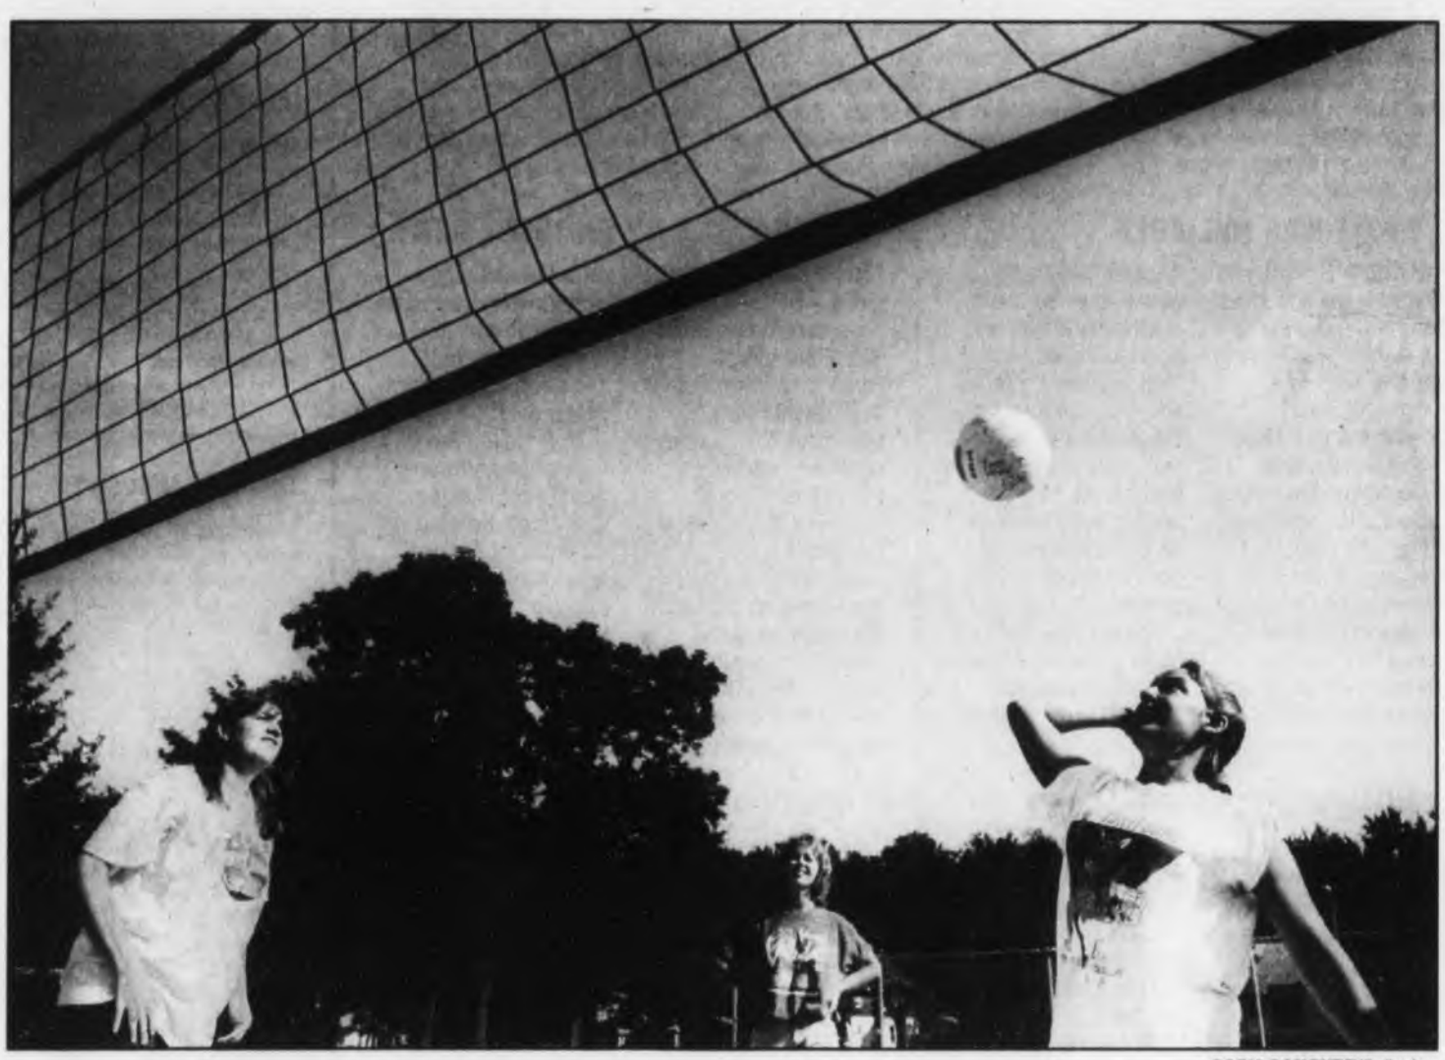
GOMA, Zaire (AP) — Setting fire to huts and looting aid camps, Zairian soldiers forced thousands of refugees back home to Rwanda on Tuesday. Another 60,000 refugees fled into the hills to escape the expulsions, apparently fearing slaughter in their homeland.

The United Nations and the U.S. State Department said the removal of refugees from camps in eastern Zaire could turn into a disaster if not stopped. Despite protests from Rwanda and the United Nations, Zaire gave no indication it was going to slow the exodus that sent 10,000 Rwandans across the border Tuesday.

Zaire began expelling refugees Saturday, but Tuesday's operation was by far the largest. Officials gave no explanation, but Zaire appeared to be pressuring the United Nations to find another country to take the refugees.

The central African nation borders nine neighbors and has 1.8 million refugees, more than any other country in the world.

At Goma, on the northern end of Lake Kivu, about 750,000 Rwandan refugees had been living in sprawling camps before the expulsions.



Almost all the refugees, both those from Rwanda and Burundi, are ethnic Hutus. Nearly 2 million Rwandan Hutus fled their homeland when Tutsi-led rebels seized power from the Hutu-dominated government in July 1994. The rebels took over after an estimated 500,000 people, mostly Tutsis, were killed by Hutu-led militias.

Among the refugees are soldiers, militiamen and officials of the former government who are blamed for planning and carrying out the massacre. Rwanda's government has charged that the Hutu militants were rearming in the refugee camps and preparing to attack Rwanda.

Many of the refugees feared retaliation for the genocide if they return. The Rwandan government was screening those who returned, searching for the perpetrators of last year's killings.

Gunfire sounded Tuesday morning at the Goma camps, U.N. refugee spokesman Peter Kessler reported. It was not immediately clear who was shooting or if there were any casualties.

Remember the Little League days? Some K-State students stay active in sports through coaching youth teams

Melissa Hoyt
contributing writer

Coaching Manhattan kids keeps K-State student Dannon McMullen active in sports.

"I got involved in coaching because I played in high school and wanted to stay involved in sports," said McMullen, junior in social work, human development and family studies.

But McMullen's job with Manhattan Parks and Recreation, coaching a girl's volleyball team, is more than just a way to pass the time.

"I have taken my girls Christmas shopping. I have even taken some trick-or-treating because they were in trouble with their parents," McMullen said.

The tradition of having a pizza and video party at McMullen's house is a popular season finale, she said.

"I keep in touch with some of my girls even after the season is over," McMullen said.

Parks and Rec offers jobs to students who want to coach flag football, volleyball and soccer during the fall.

"I have been excited for the season to start for the last three months," Larry Bunce, graduate student in psychology, said.

Bunce said coaching this year's flag-football group would be different because this was the youngest group he had ever coached.

"They are fourth and fifth graders," he said. "It should be fun, though, because they are there to play, and they want to be there."

Bunce has an assistant coach this year to help him with the fourth and fifth graders, he said.

"I know that I couldn't do it by myself," Bunce said.

As a student, Bunce will commit about 10 hours to his team, including practice, games and extra planning, he said.

"Coaches set their own practice schedule, but the time commitment is usually four to six hours a week," Mike Buchanan, recreation supervisor for Parks and Rec, said.

Coaches and youth have two practices each week and a game, he said.

"Most practices are two hours long, except volleyball. Their practices are one hour due to limited space," Buchanan said.

A good coach depends on the volunteer's personality, Buchanan said.

"There is no pattern for who are coaches and who are not. Some people are just interested," Buchanan said.

About half the coaching positions for Parks and Rec are filled by college students, Buchanan said.

"In the fall, we have 80 to 85 teams and 40 of those are coached by students," Buchanan said.

The fall season is from Sept. 5 to

K-State, Salina charge 2 tuitions from student

Sarah Lunday
campus editor

Jason Floyd paid to attend two colleges during fee payment at Ahearn Field House Friday.

"I'm paying about $300 more," Floyd said.

After spending more than a week contacting administrators at K-State and K-State-Salina, Floyd learned that although K-State-Salina's College of Technology is part of K-State, the tuition is paid in Manhattan but charged separately.

"We haven't united these campuses in terms of fees yet," Keith Ratzloff, University controller, said.

Floyd, junior in hotel and restaurant management, paid full-time tuition for 11 hours in Manhattan and part-time tuition for five hours in Salina.

He said he doesn't understand why K-State-Salina is not considered another college on campus.

"If K-State-Salina is the ninth campus in the University, then I shouldn't have to pay for two colleges," Floyd said.

Although Floyd's academic focus is hotel and restaurant management, which is offered in Manhattan, he would like to become a pilot by attending classes at the Salina campus, he said.

"It's like we're all just one big happy family, except you have to pay tuition over there," Floyd said.

Floyd is not the only student who has taken classes at both campuses and paid more than the average full-time student would pay, Ratzloff said.

Becky Klenklen

K-State agricultural administrators recently proposed a long-term plan to realign statewide research sites.

"It will help us do field research in different climates on representative soils in the most efficient matter," said Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Kansas Agriculture Experiment Station.

KAES research land is now leased, not owned. However, administrators proposed to buy the land and down-size the current land being leased.

"Our goal is to use research dollars most effectively, do crops and soils research that benefits the most producers and make efficient use of personnel," George Ham, associate dean of the College of Agriculture and associate director of KAES, said.

KAES is spending 49 percent of its $110,690 operating budget. Instead of leasing land, they could spend almost $54,000 on payments to buy it, Ham said.

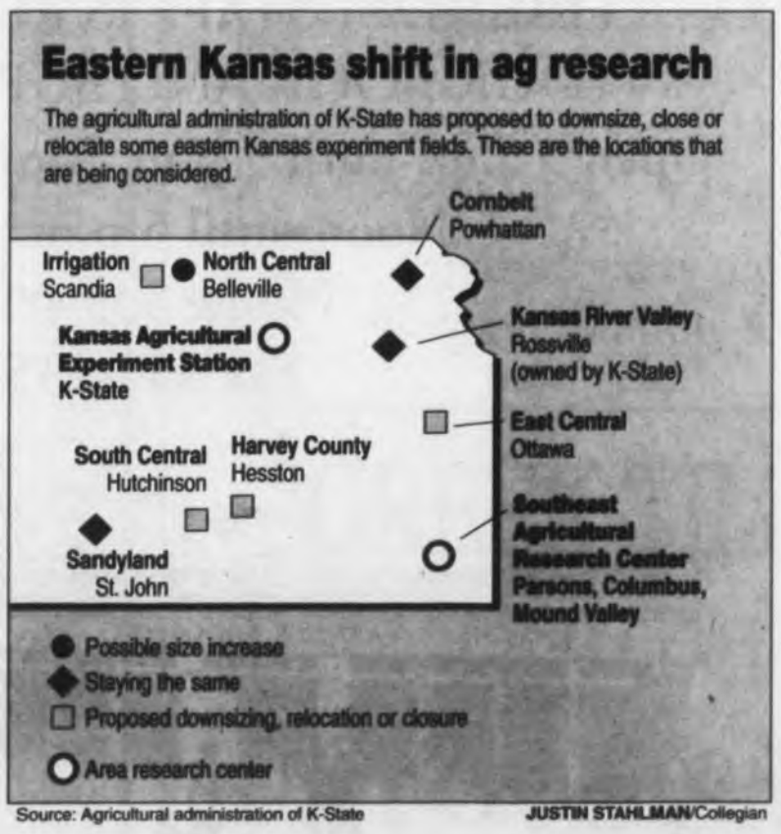
It is economical to buy the land because long-term research plans can be put on hold or ruined with a short-term lease if the owner wishes to quit leasing, he said.

The plan began with the United State Department of Agriculture agronomy reviews starting in 1981. KAES has had committees reporting to them since 1986.

"It has been a very long and deliberate process," Michel Ransom, professor of agronomy, said.

Ransom, who served on the Agricultural Research Location and Evaluation Committee, said several committees developed proposals which resulted in the final proposal.

The committees proposed to close leased research areas of Irrigated Experiment Field in Scandia, East Central Experiment Field in Ottawa and Harvey County Experiment Field in Hesston, Ham said.



"The very earliest we could close the Ottawa station is 1997 and the one in Hesston by 1999," Johnson said.

The committees plan to keep the research centers at North Central Experiment Field in Belleville, Cornbelt Experiment Field in Powhattan, Sandyland Field at St. John and the Kansas River Valley Field in Topeka and Rossville.

The proposal also includes relocating the South Central Experimental Field located in Hutchinson to a different site in the Goddard and Conway Springs area.

The proposal to move the South Central Experimental Field is to help research their continuous wheat crop. They have a high wheat concentration in that area, and it is important to do different experiments for them, Johnson said.

The Sandyland Field in St. John, which is now leased, is there to help research dry-land farming. They hope to buy it and make it a satellite of the Southwest Research-Extension Center in Garden City.

Residence hall door closing varies from hall to hall

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

It's midnight, the doors are locked and you forgot your residence hall Validine card.

Exactly what time did those doors lock?

Housing and Dining Services mandates that residence halls lock all doors except the lobby door around the clock.

But each hall's lobby doors close at different times depending on the vote of the Hall Governing Board, Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining, said.

Students are not given the option of keeping the doors open any later than midnight, he said.

"If students want to lock their doors earlier, then they can vote and the hall director can approve it," Hasan said.

Some halls might choose to say open longer than that, but they aren't given the option.

"Housing leaves it up to us, but we couldn't really cut them any shorter," said Jeremy Rogge, senior in accounting and president of Marlatt Hall.

Each year, HGB votes on whether to keep or change the previous year's lock-down times, and then the hall director decides whether or not to approve the changes.

The decision to lock Boyd Hall 24 hours a day was made last year by Boyd's HGB, Michelle Cortese, hall president, said.

▶ AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SYSTEM SUBJECT TO COMPUTER FAILURES

(AP) Four times this year, the phrase "NOT UPDATING RADAR AND TIME" has flashed across radar screens at the FAA's air traffic control center in Chicago.

Then, just as suddenly, symbols for hundreds of planes carrying thousands of lives to family, vacations and business have wavered and vanished.

"There's no way to relate to what happens next," Ken Kluge, a controller at the Aurora, Ill., facility said. "It's total chaos. The minute the computer flops, your heart jumps into overdrive."

Such failures have become common to the nation's frayed air traffic control system. The network has experienced 21 failures since April, caused mostly by computer breakdowns and other equipment malfunctions. The New York center alone has had three failures.

The breakdowns have not resulted in any crashes. But controllers have been forced to rely on backup systems that aren't as sophisticated. And in some cases, they have lost all radio contact with planes in the air.

The immediate problem is aging computers, some of which have 1950s vacuum-tube technology. Maintenance on key computers is delayed for fear of damaging crumbling components for which there are no replacements.

No quick fixes are in sight. Five key control centers will have to nurse old computers another two years.

▶ PILOT WAS RELIABLE

DUBLIN, Ga. (AP) — Whatever the crisis, Ed Gannaway was the person you wanted with you, friends said Tuesday as they recalled the pilot killed when his commuter plane crashed in a field.

Gannaway was one of five who died, and passengers and witnesses gave him credit for saving the other 24 lives. They said he maneuvered his Atlantic Southeast Airlines plane past houses, trees and power lines before it crashed and broke apart in a field.

"If you want a headline, you put down that Ed Gannaway was a hero," his friend Jeff Davis said. "A lot of people lived because he kept his head and got that thing on the ground."

Gannaway, 45, had been with ASA about 6 1/2 years and had 10,000 hours of flying time.

▶ WOMEN DOCTORS WANTED

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Many other women are discovering, this is a great time to be a doctor.

Women doctors are being sought out, courted and offered lucrative job opportunities that earlier generations of women physicians only could dream of.

"Female physicians are in very high demand in every region of the country,"said James Merritt of the Merritt, Hawkins & Associates medical recruiting firm. "If the average male primary care doctor has 10 (job) offers, the average female may get 20.

"They can pull an extra 10 or 20 percent (salary) out of the gate. If they're wanted badly, I've seen some pretty big deals."

That's a big change for women doctors, who traditionally earned a third less than their male counterparts.

▶ DOLE PICKS UP ENDORSEMENT

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP)— Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole toured BMW's new auto plant Tuesday as he prepared to pick up a key GOP endorsement from former South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell.

Campbell accompanied Dole on a tour of the German auto maker's new plant near Greer. The former governor, who has been mentioned as a possible vice presidential candidate, was to deliver his endorsement late Tuesday, Dole's campaign said.

Dole called the Campbell endorsement very exciting. Campbell, now an insurance industry executive, remains a popular political figure in South Carolina, which has its first-in-the-South Republican presidential primary March 2.

▶ TROOPS LEAVE FOR IRAQ

(AP) About 300 U.S. Marines and sailors left California's Camp Pendleton Tuesday, and several hundred soldiers waited to fly out of Fort Hood, Texas, for Middle East military exercises to deter Iraqi aggression.

The Fort Hood deployment was troubled for the second straight day by delays the Army would explain only vaguely.

A flight was canceled Sunday, and Tuesday 270 soldiers stood by waiting to board a DC-10 that had been scheduled to take off at 8 a.m., Staff Sgt. Christian Mulvey said.

"Part of the coordination required en route still needs to be completed to ensure a smooth arrival," Mulvey said in identical statements both days. "It is impossible to predict the length of the delay, but it doesn't appear it will be long."

The Camp Pendleton Marines will prepare combat equipment.

'Lips Together, Teeth Apart' re-opens; characters try to learn to communicate

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

In college, you make many new friendships and relationships. With hope, most of these "-ships" are based on good communication.

Good communication is something that readily lacks among the four characters of Terrence McNally's talkfest comedy, "Lips Together, Teeth Apart," which K-State Summer Theatre is re-opening at 8 p.m. Thursday in Nichols Theatre.

It is a re-opening of sorts, because the show had a two-week run in mid-June.

Director Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech, said "Lips" isn't about smiling, but about getting through life.

"It's very much a New York play," she said.

It is a New York play because it deals very deeply with major issues in life with a very sophisticated and outspoken humor, she said.

The play follows a duo of couples vacationing on the Fourth of July on Fire Island, New York — a predominantly gay island.

The couples, all in their mid- to late 30s, each face life's issues and struggle to deal with them.

"Their world is increasingly difficult for them to understand," MacFarland said.

They see the new generation taking over, they feel surrounded by AIDS, and they are afraid of death, MacFarland said.

"It touches very deeply on young people," she said.

Gretchen Morgan, senior in theater and Sally in "Lips," said, "Even if we haven't had the same experiences, we know the base feelings of the characters."

Travis Malone, who plays the part of John in the play, agrees.

"Everyone can relate to these characters at different points in their life," he said.

"John's a control-oriented guy. We'd all like to be in control"

Each of the four cast members said the central theme of "Lips" is one of good communication.

Malone, graduate student in theater, said "Lips" opens with everyone talking to the air about their problems when they should be talking to the person standing next to them.

Dan Shea, graduate student in theater and Sam in "Lips," said many of the largest epiphanies are to themselves.

Jennifer Grace, junior in theater and Chloe in "Lips," said at the end of the play nothing concrete has happened, but the characters have at least started talking to each other.

The cast has spent the last week in rehearsal. They were only given two weeks of rehearsal time in May and June before the show opened.

"The tight schedule didn't allow for a full character development, so now we're developing our characters to so many new levels," Morgan said.

Terrence McNally's other plays include "The Lisbon Traviata," "Frankie and Johnny in the Clair de Lune," and his newest work, "Love!Valour! Compassion!" which won the Tony award as best play of 1994.

MacFarland said it is rare for one of McNally's plays to be done in this region, but she looks forward to the challenge.

"I like doing different types of plays I haven't done before," she said.

McNally's plays deal unconventionally with AIDS, homosexuality, marital woes and death. Although "Lips" could be considered somewhat controversial, the summer production didn't solicit any negative comments, MacFarland said.

"It's hard to get people into a play that's serious and small," MacFarland said. "People should expose themselves to these plays. They're important," she said.

TICKET TIME

'No sit-in' policy cheats students on both sides

More than likely, instructors won't give a student permission to enroll if they have never seen the student before and don't think they are genuinely interested.

The English department at K-State has a new assignment for its students: Fill a chosen orifice with a favorite digit and hold your breath.

Many students are upset with this department's newly instigated policy of not allowing them to sit in on classes without being officially enrolled in the classes.

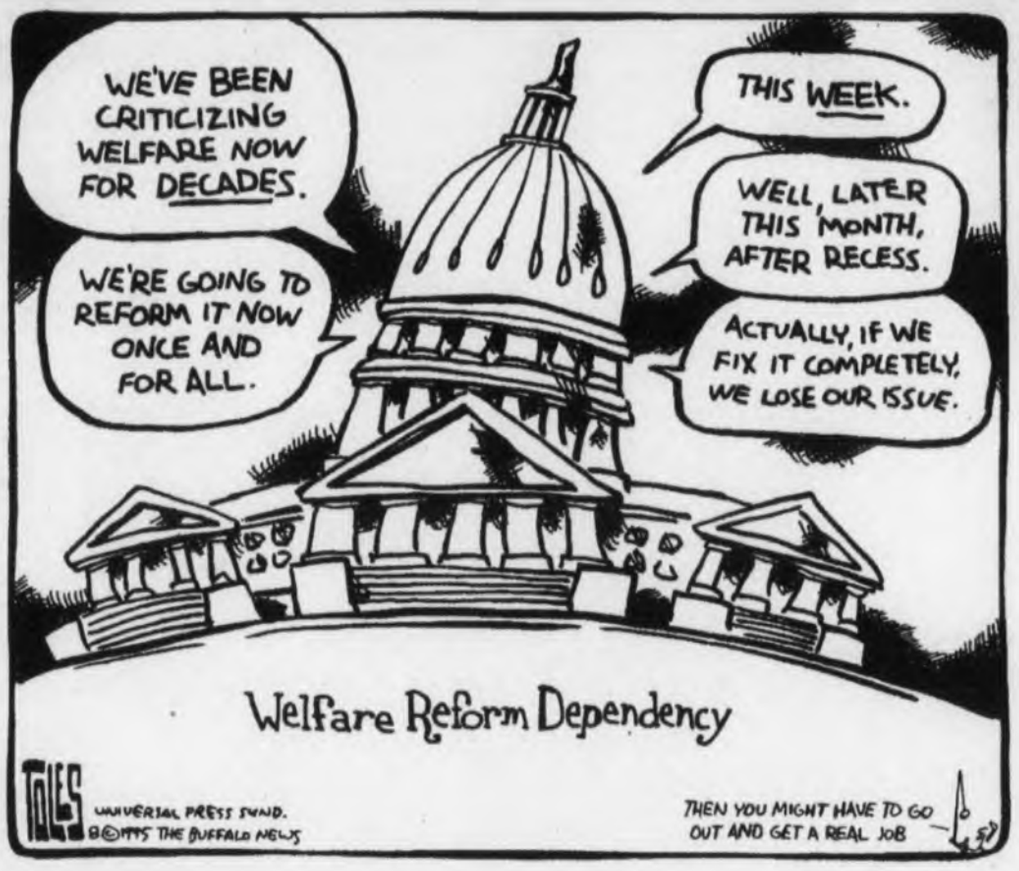
According to the head of the expository writing sections, Irene Ward, this policy was put into effect with the best interests of the student in mind.

This line of thought seems to dictate that students would be better served by dealing with the drop/add process in order to gain enrollment into these classes, instead of attending them so they won't fall behind.

Not that falling behind should become a problem, because Ward said she has instructed the expository writing graduate teaching assistants not to give out any major assignments for the first week and a half, after the drop/add period.

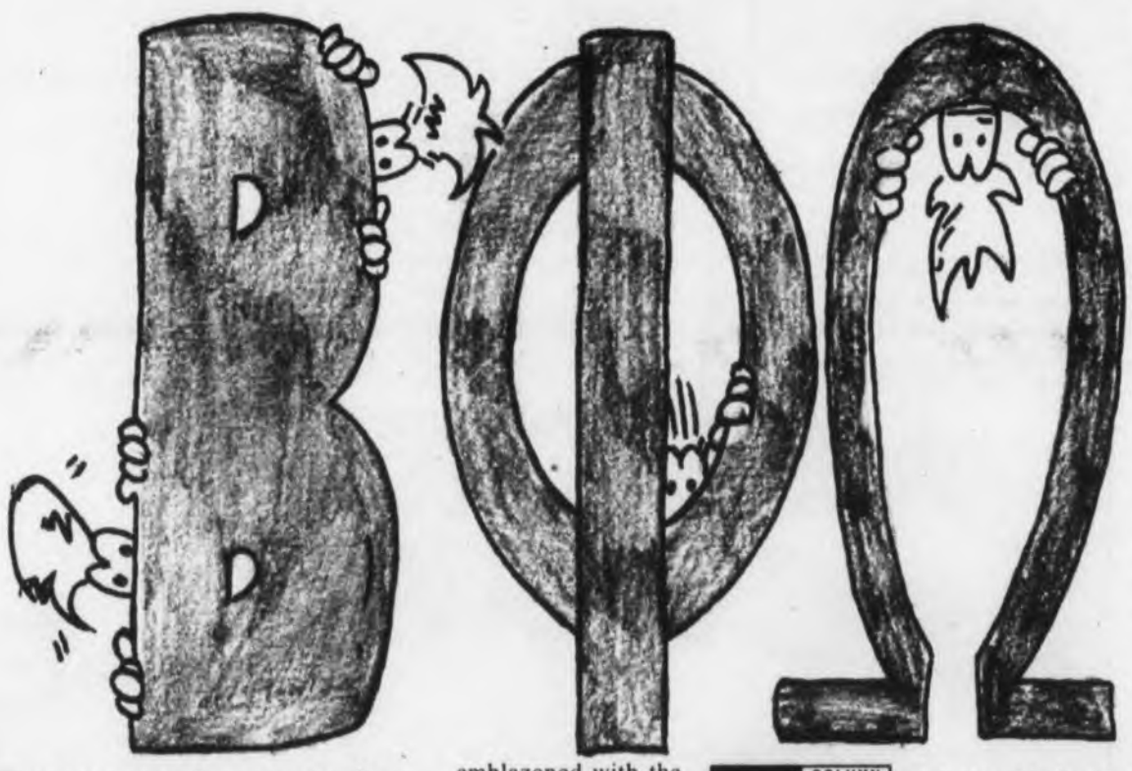
The dilemma with this policy is that it cheats both the students waiting to pick these classes up and the students already enrolled in the classes.

Both groups of students have paid their tuition.



The students who are not enrolled need to be in those classes.

More than likely, instructors won't give a student permission to enroll if they have never seen the student before and don't think they are genuinely interested.



Similarly, an enrolled student could safely skip the first two weeks of the class with the safe assurance that they won't miss anything important.

Perhaps some clarification of the expository writing department's intentions is in order. Students should be encouraged to try to get an education, not turned away at the door.

Greek combats against stereotypes

I spent my entire summer, from the end of finals week until Aug. 1, driving around the state of Kansas.

Whether the town was Hays, Sedgwick, or Overland Park, I traveled from town to town meeting high-school graduates interested in joining my fraternity.

It was a long, hellish, boring summer filled with shaking hands, victories and defeats. All the time on the road lent to possible topics for my column this semester, but one stuck out in particular, striking close to home.

I was eating with a friend at a restaurant in my hometown when a member of a local fraternity walked in wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with the logo "No Matter What the Letter, We're All Greek Together." It was the university's rush logo a few summers ago, and it really caught my interest.

COLUMN
JUSTIN WILD

I began thinking about my greek experience at K-State, as well as the experiences of friends who are greek at other universities. Ranging from the good to the bad, they stretched into what no one can possibly understand until having been through the system.

The one greatest myth which exists about greeks is that we are all the same.

The aforementioned motto disregards the truth which exists in all cultural subgroups, that being the fact that even though a group of people might align themselves under a certain name, differences, at times vast, still exist between them.

Another flaw within the greek community does not lie in the differences between houses.

Rather, it lies amidst two types of greeks: Those who stand before their letters and those who stand behind them.

Greeks who stand behind their letters are also those who earn the stereotypes laden on members of fraternities and sororities, that being either beer-swilling Aryans or girls who chase their ponytails down to TCBY.

They consist of members who are content to attend parties and an occasional chapter meeting but never truly get involved beyond wearing their letters.

Individuals who stand before their letters are the people who make being greek a wonderful, long-lasting experience.

They are the ones who make their mark beyond any organization they belong to; they stand up and take difficult positions in their fraternities and sororities.

When all is said and done, they live up to the oaths they took at initiation — keeping close ties to their houses and helping out with both time and money.

And, unfortunately, they are slighted by members of their house and of the greek community who enjoy snuggling into stereotypes.

Over time, many organizations are remembered for members of disrepute rather than those who were outstanding leaders and role models; take, for example, a political party.

Although a good or bad politician is something of a personal opinion, ex-presidents such as Nixon and Carter are more thought of as bad than good.

> "I refuse to be chummy with an individual just because he wears letters."
> JUSTIN WILD

This same factor runs true in all groups; in the end, will the ties of supposed unity be helpful to the descendants of a group, or will it make the collective itself extinct?

I believe that, over time, the positive reflections made by the greek community upon society will make the overall system prosper and grow.

However, that does not mean that I, nor anyone else, must align themselves with dead weights in the system.

I refuse to be chummy with an individual just because he wears letters.

I will stand, though, with individuals who constantly assert themselves as people with strong personal characteristics and beliefs. They are the ones who deserve, in the end, to characterize a group of people.

Shannon Faulkner moved heaven, earth, and the U.S. Supreme Court to get herself admitted to the Citidel, one of the last all-male institutions in the country.

Once there, she lasted a little more than a week, finally leaving and blaming it in part on "stress and knowing the whole world was watching every move I made."

After an almost two-year battle that finally went to the Supreme Court, after being the first female day student to be admitted to the Citadel, after dealing with the death threats, obscenities and graffiti on her parents' house, she finally threw in the towel.

I was mad. I admit it. Here was a smart, strong girl throwing herself against a brick wall for no other reason than because everyone said she couldn't. That takes guts in spades.

Shannon dragged the Citadel and its lawyers through every court in the land just to be given the chance to attend.

Even though women have been teachers and administrators at the school for years, the thought of a woman competing among them seemed to strike fear in the hearts of old Southern boys.

The school gave every reason it could come up with not to let her in. Some of these include that men don't want to be embarrassed in front of women, men learn better when women aren't present and she would be destroying a "long and proud tradition."

> "The sad part of this whole mess is that it was even an issue to begin with."
> KADY GUYTON

When none of those worked, they claimed that as a freshman she would have to have her head shaved just like everyone else. Shannon replied that it was just hair and it would grow back.

The courts ruled that she didn't have to have her head shaved, calling it degrading to women.

Well, Shannon, you gave a valiant effort. Too bad it didn't last.

I can't say that I wouldn't have done the same thing; hazing has never been my idea of a good time. But she seemed like such a strong person, calling herself an "individualist" rather than a feminist.

I can see why she would want to have the Citadel as an alma mater. The alumni includes several senators and a former governor, not to mention many prominent businessmen throughout the country.

The network of Citadel graduates is old, strong and influential. Having them for a base would give anyone a decent start.

So this is how it ends — the Citadel won. That fortress of male supremacy still stands in Charleston — smug, confident and strictly no girls allowed.

Or has it? Shannon Faulkner endured their abuse as a day student for a year before being admitted as a regular cadet. Surely that should be worth something. The door might have swung closed, but women still have a toe in.

Shannon has my admiration for trying, and she inspired 45 other women to apply to the Citadel after her.

The sad part of this whole mess is that it was even an issue to begin with. The Citadel is supported with state funds and cannot be discriminatory in any way.

The U.S. Armed Forces academies have been co-educational since 1976. Why did the Citadel think it could keep holding out? We're almost into a new century — shouldn't we be past this by now?

Maybe down the road, some fresh-faced young lady will decide to take her run at the Citadel. I just hope the Citadel is ready for her.

▶ ENGLISH POLICIES

To the Editor,

I am so outraged that I don't know where to begin, so I'll just blurt it out.

The English department won't let me sit in on Expository Writing II class. Not just me and not just Expository Writing II. They won't let anyone sit in on any of the Expository Writing classes.

I'm sure that the English department has its reasons for keeping unenrolled students out of the classroom. I can't think right offhand what these reasons would be, but I'm pretty sure they have nothing to do with the best interests of the students.

I was told not to worry about missing the first week of classes because it was planned so that nothing important was done until right after the drop/add process was over. Wasting the students time is better than letting people sit in?

I know that I won't get any handouts or attention — I still want to sit in. I know I only have a one-in-23 chance of getting in — I still want to sit in. I know I would be wasting my time if I couldn't get enrolled. If I want to waste my time by learning, that's my choice — I still want to sit in.

However, after talking with two instructors, Irene Ward, director of Expository Writing, and Dean Feyerharm of the College of Arts and Sciences, I finally got the message — fat chance.

I could understand if there weren't enough room, but there are an average of 40 desks per classroom (yes, I counted them) and only 22 students enrolled. I could understand if it were a complete waste of my time, but I can apply the work that I do to the class I eventually get into. I could understand if I were asking for special favors, but people sit in on classes all the time. That's how I got into Expository Writing I.

I realize that I might not be able to enroll and I might not get credit for the class. I just can't believe that after paying more than $1,000 for tuition, I would be denied the right to learn whatever I want to learn, whether I get credit for it or not.

▶ GTA UNIONIZATION

Dear editor,

In the Collegian of Aug. 23, I was quoted as saying, "When KU unionized, the faculty came out against it, and there was a two-year lawsuit." In no way did I indicate the KU faculty came out against GTA unionization. In fact, the KU GTAs who I talked to said they received invaluable support from faculty. The lawsuit I mentioned was the result of resistance from the administration. Please note the distinction between "faculty" and "administration."

LucasArts new video game exciting and challenging

Eric Westphal
contributing writer

In Full Throttle, the latest release from LucasArts Entertainment Company, the player assumes the role of Ben Whatsisname, the leader of the Polecats, a tough, heavy-metal motorcycle gang.

Ben's bike has been trashed, the Polecats have been ambushed, and Ben has been framed for murder.

It is up to you to rescue Ben and his gang. Along the way, you will encounter rival motorcycle gangs, temperamental truckers and the law.

LucasArts, the makers of Star Wars-genre games, such as X-Wing, TIE Fighter, Rebel Assault and Dark Forces, have once again developed a game that is both challenging and exciting.

The playing style is similar to King's Quest, Leisure Suit Larry and Return to Zork, all of which allow you to use your mouse to click on the location where you want Ben to walk.

The mouse is also used to punch, kick, open, close, talk to and look at objects. When talking to others, a selection of responses are given to "click" on.

Full Throttle, available only on CD-ROM, comes packed with excellent graphics and sound effects, as well as high-quality background music by the heavy-metal band Gone Jackals.

The voices and lip movements of the characters are well-synchronized, and the introduction, which is almost movie-like, is one of the best I have seen.

Another feature of Full Throttle that I appreciated is that you cannot die. You are able to check out everything without facing the risk of starting over.

Full Throttle also gives you the option to save your game, so you can resume play later without being forced to start over.

Although the game has several excellent features, there is one area that could use improvement. You are only able to control Ben by using your mouse or keyboard.

This is a disappointment for those of us who like to sit back in our chairs and play the game with a joystick.

But don't let that stop you from buying the game. With its excellent graphics and soundtrack, Full Throttle has set a new standard in role-playing adventure games.

If you like a challenging, high-quality adventure game, Full Throttle is for you. Your game collection would not be complete without it.

Employees to get paid bi-weekly

Kimberly Kircher
staff reporter

A human-resource information system is being established at K-State to cope with the January 1996 statewide transition from monthly to biweekly paychecks.

"There will be a brand-new client-server computer program all over campus," Gary Leitnaker, director of Human Resource Services, said.

The HRIS will have a chance to prove itself Jan. 12, when K-State employees receive their first biweekly paycheck.

"Many employees do not know anything but monthly pay periods, but I think employees will enjoy biweekly payroll once they get used to it," Leitnaker said.

Last November the Kansas Legislature voted for a statewide biweekly payroll, which included all K-State employees.

"Biweekly payroll is in the best interest of the state, yet a lot of employees may have a hard time adjusting," said Jennifer Gehrt, assistant director of Human Resources Services.

Budgeting with a biweekly paycheck could be easier, said Kerri Korte, sophomore in community health and nutrition.

"My problem is spending my money all at once, so by the end of the month I have nothing left," she said.

Planning for the biweekly paycheck might make the transition from monthly to biweekly easier, Sharlotte Scoby, office assistant, said.

"It is hard with house and car payments at the beginning of the month, and that monthly paycheck is helpful," she said.

The departments will be able to input individual employee's hours in their office computers on the payroll program, he said.

"The new system is definitely a time-saver," Leitnaker said.

Paychecks will be mailed directly to campus employees, he said.

Electronic deposits into individual checking accounts are also an option, Leitnaker said.

"Direct deposits are quick and convenient," he said.

Student employee paychecks will be delivered directly to each department head, he said.

"All payroll is computed at K-State and then sent by computer tape to Topeka, where they print the checks," Leitnaker said.

Now, 9,500 paychecks are sent to K-State employees each month, he said.

Another female to try to enroll at the Citadel

Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Another woman wants to take up the fight Shannon Faulkner abandoned when she dropped out of the Citadel.

The woman's name will be added on Wednesday or Thursday to the lawsuit challenging the state-run military school's men-only policy, lawyers said.

"There is a woman who will step in and take off in the same shoes that Shannon stepped out of," attorney Suzanne Coe said Tuesday.

Coe refused to name the woman until court papers are filed but said she is a South Carolina college student with Reserve Officer Training Corps experience.

U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck also will be asked to make the case a class action, which would keep open the possibility other women could become cadets next fall, said another lawyer on the case, Val Vojdik.

Faulkner, 20, battled for 2 1/2 years to become the first woman cadet in the school's 152-year history. But she dropped out after less than a week Friday, saying the emotional stress and isolation were damaging her health.

Words to live by for the upcoming football season

Gather 'round, kids, and take a seat on my knee, because Uncle Todd is going to lay down some truths, so listen up, because he's only going to do this once.

Matt "In the Right Place at the Right Time" Miller is the luckiest man in K-State football history.

No Wildcat has ever gotten the chance to quarterback a more talented team.

However, don't get all excited and start talking national championship.

Even history's most-talented Wildcat team will only go 9-2.

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

But don't blame Miller — the man he replaced wouldn't fare much better.

With Chad May, the best the Cats could hope for would be 10-1.

The best thing that could have happened for Miller and the 1995 Cats is the graduation of all-time leading rusher J.J. Smith. For seniority reasons, two more talented backs spent most of last year on the pine.

With J.J. Smith, the 1995 Cats go 8-3.

His rushing record will be history in three years.

Ole' J.J. wasn't even the best on last year's squad. If Smith had not been a senior, he would have been third on the depth chart.

J.J. Smith will still be an excellent NFL player.

As for Miller, no matter how poorly he plays, he should be at least second-team all-Big 8.

Receivers Kevin Lockett, Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running will each catch more than 40 passes apiece.

So stop worrying about Miller. With Lockett, Schwieger and Running, he is going to be OK.

Back in Uncle Todd's younger days, even he could dump 40 passes to each of those three and make third-team all-Big 8. Fortunately for Miller and the Cats, Miller is more talented. But some would argue he's just not quite as pretty as your Uncle Todd in the pocket.

Settle down, Coach Bill Snyder, Uncle Todd's calling is the newsroom, not Wagner Field. This reporter has hung up the cleats.

Enough about me, kids, now for a few words about the defense.

Defensive tackle Tim Colston will be the unanimous Big 8 defensive player of the year and will be a first-team All-American.

Uncle Todd's friendly advice is to fear Mr. Colston. He is the scariest player in the Big 8 and on the K-State campus.

If you see Mr. Colston on campus, turn around and go the other way. There is nothing wrong with doing this. Uncle Todd follows this game plan, and it makes him no less of a man. He's still your Uncle Todd.

Big-game linebacker Percell Gaskins will top 10 tackles in each of the home games against Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado. The key to Gaskins' season will be the lesser games. If Gaskins stops his magic act and quits disappearing against lesser opponents, he could also be an All-American.

The secondary will be the tops in the Big 8, and in the top five in the nation. This could be the fastest foursome in the conference.

So, children, stop your worrying, football season will be just fine here in Wildcat Land.

That's enough for today, kids. Now, jump off Uncle Todd's knee, and get ready for bed. Make sure to wash behind your ears and brush your teeth. Your Uncle Todd will be there to tuck you in soon.

Stat of the week: In his collegiate quarterback career, opening day starter Matt Miller has completed only four more passes than Uncle Todd.

■ Coach Moore's team excited for 1995 season

Shana Newell
contributing writer

The K-State volleyball team is well on its way to recording a winning season in the books.

Under the guidance of Coach Jim Moore, the team begins play Sept. 1-2 at the Long Beach State Tournament in California. It will face off against Utah State and Long Beach State.

In three of the last six years, LBSU has reached the finals in post-season play.

"This will be an interesting test to see where we stand against one of the better teams nationally," Moore said.

K-State hits the road again on Sept. 8-9 for the Nebraska Tournament in Lincoln. Both are Big 10 teams that are ranked nationally and will provide another challenge for the Wildcats. Moore said he believes, however, that the team can compete well at this level.

"We have a physically strong, athletic team with a lot of height. We're strong in the middle and can pass the ball well," Moore said.

He said his only concerns right now are the team's errors.

"We have a lot of unforced errors that we need to cut down on," he said.

The Wildcats do not play at home until Sept. 22-23, when they will be the hosts of the KSU Invitational.

Once K-State begins Big 8 conference play, the team will see a competitive schedule, Moore said.

Each school has a great program, and the possibility for post-season appearances is high for all the schools, especially the University of Nebraska. Nebraska has been ranked No. 2 in the preseason.

K-State returns five of its six starters from last year, with only Kathryn Wylie not returning.

Top returners are junior middle blocker Kate DeClerk, senior swing hitter Jill Dugan, junior outside hitter Yolanda Young and sophomore setter Devon Ryning.

DeClerk, a 6-foot-2-inch Windom, Minn. native, led the Wildcats in hitting percentage at .293, fifth-best in the Big Eight. She also finished third in the league standings in blocks.

Dugan, 6'0" from Grand Island, Neb., led the Big Eight in blocking with an average of 1.37 per game. She also finished 10th in the conference in service aces.

From Omaha, Neb., with a height of 5'10", Young was named to the second-team All-Big Eight last year after leading the Wildcat hitting attack in total kills with 381 on the season. That was the fifth-best single-season total in school history.

Enumclaw, Wash., a native of Ryning, 5'11", while only a freshman last season, had an outstanding year, finishing fifth in the Big Eight in assists with 778, an average of 9.49 per game.

To add even more punch to this stellar cast, Moore has recruited seven new players.

From Baca Raton, Fla., Mariela Fasce joins the Wildcats as a back-up setter. While only 5'3", she is quick and will definitely see some playing time, Moore said.

Three players join Jill Dugan from her hometown of Grand Island, Neb. Linsey Luther was recruited as an outside hitter but will move to setter. The 6'1" freshman was a Nebraska Class B All-State selection.

"We are planning on making her a setter. She is tall at 6 foot, and being a left-hander is a great advantage as a setter," Moore said.

Luther's sister, Kelli, transferred from the University of Wisconsin and will see some playing time as a swing hitter for the Cats.

The third Grand Island, Neb, native is freshman recruit Valerie Wieck.

"She is easily one of the nation's top blockers. Right off the bat, she will be able to step in and make an impact at middle blocker," Moore said.

Kimberly Zschau joins the team from Dunedin, Fla. She is tall and quick, has great technique and hits the ball high.

"Kimberly has only been playing at the club level for a year, and I think that is the reason why a lot of people haven't seen her. She has a tremendous amount of potential," Moore said.

Maria Stock and Anna Kaloujskitch round out the rest of the new Wildcats. Stock is a junior transfer from Benedictine College who will play middle blocker. Kaloujskitch hails from Moscow, Russia, and looks to be a strong influence on the team.

Joining Coach Moore and assistant coach Stacy Metro is a second assistant, Jeff Reavis. Reavis is a 1994 graduate of the University of Colorado and spent last year at the University of Tampa as an assistant coach.

$100 million Tyson, Foreman fight proposed

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— Bob Arum, the promoter for George Foreman, proposed Monday that Foreman and Mike Tyson meet in what he believes would be the biggest fight by far of all time with a neutral party handling the money.

The winner, Arum said, could conceivably earn $80 million or more.

Foreman said in an interview last May he wouldn't fight Tyson if Don King were the promoter, and Arum and King have been bitter rivals for many years. King has been Tyson's promoter since 1988.

"Now we've found a solution for that," Arum said before boarding an airplane for New York. "My feeling is that anybody can say they're involved or not involved (in the promotion).

"This is the proposition: We'll let some neutral party come in that everybody respects and handle all the money and make all the arrangements, and that would eliminate George's concern.

"The guy that we would suggest does that is Henry Gluck, the former chairman of the Board of Caesars World, who's recently resigned. Tyson knows him, Tyson's fought there, King knows him, George knows him. We would certainly accept him as the neutral party to handle all the finances."

Arum's proposal is that each fighter is guaranteed $15 million with the winner receiving whatever remains of the proceeds after promotional expenses are deducted.

"I say the fight will bring in at least $100 million, so the winner will earn $85 million minus expenses, about $5 million," Arum said. "The winner conceivably could get $80 million, without a doubt."

Tyson, 29, needed only 89 seconds to dispose of Peter McNeeley on Saturday night at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas when McNeeley's manager climbed into the ring, leading to his boxer's disqualification. McNeeley had been knocked down twice but was on his feet at the time.

Foreman, who turns 47 next January, last fought April 22, scoring a controversial decision victory over Axel Schulz of Germany.

"Everybody's talking to us about a Tyson-Foreman fight," Arum said. "Let me tell you, Tyson is nothing. George Foreman would beat Tyson quicker than he did (Joe) Frazier."

Arum referred to Foreman's victory against Frazier in 1973, when Foreman floored Frazier six times before the bout was stopped in the second round to win the undisputed world heavyweight championship.

"If Tyson's a man, he's going to rise to the challenge instead of fighting guys who are not even professional fighters, like his last opponent (McNeeley)," Arum said.

"Tyson really throws punches like a girl now.

"This guy can't beat a 47-year-old guy — by the time they fight, George will probably be 47. If he can't beat a 47-year-old man, who's he kidding?"

K-State's all-time leading rusher, J.J. Smith, survives cut

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo.— Linebacker Percy Snow's comeback attempt with the Kansas City Chiefs apparently is over.

Snow, the Chiefs' 1990 first-round draft pick, was among at least nine players who were told Monday they were being released, the Kansas City Star reported Tuesday.

NFL teams had until 3 p.m. Tuesday to cut their rosters to 60 players.

The Chiefs would not release the names of those released Monday. But the Star listed them as Snow; wide receivers Wesley Carroll, Allen DeGraffenreid and Harrison Houston; running back Terry Richardson; offensive linemen Ron Florine and David Ware; linebacker Arnold Ale; and cornerback Perry Carter.

Players who were released returned from practice and found letters on the stool in front of their lockers asking them to report to the personnel office.

"I knew what long odds I was up against here," said Snow, who was cut by the Chiefs in camp two years ago, spent the 1993 season with the Chicago Bears and did not play in the NFL last year.

"I've got no hard feelings. But I don't want to talk about it."

Snow's Chiefs career began coming undone early. In 1991, he fell off a motor scooter in training camp, broke an ankle and missed the entire season.

He went back to River Falls, Wis., this summer looking for another chance and got it.

In three preseason games, he had made eight tackles.

Rookie running back J.J. Smith survived Monday's cuts.

"I saw that (letter) waiting for some of my friends," Smith said.

"I knew that envelope couldn't be good news."

Green making noise on track national circuit

Nicole Green, a former K-State track team member, is showing well on the international circuit.

Green, who won the 400-meter title for K-State at the 1995 NCAA Outdoor Championships in June, recorded a personal-best split of 51.3 as the third leg of the silver medal-winning USA 1,600-meter relay team at the World Track and Field Championships in Gotenburg, Sweden.

Green is currently participating in the USA vs. Great Britain Dual Meet.

"It has been a wonderful opportunity for Nikki to experience competition at the international level," K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"The best in the world are at the World Championships, and if you get there, you belong. Nikki's accomplishments lend credibility to our program, and athletes in our program are going to have the benefit of her experiences."

Kansas Lottery makes $53 million for Kansas

Brent Johnson
staff reporter

The Kansas Lottery set new records for the fiscal year 1995 with more than $171 million in sales and $53.71 million transferred to the state of Kansas.

Pam Evans, Kansas Lottery Public Information Officer, said of the money transferred to the state of Kansas for the fiscal year 1994, Riley County received $4.67 million.

All the distribution totals for how much Riley County will receive of the record amount of money transferred to Kansas was not yet available because the fiscal year ended in June.

For the fiscal year 1994, Riley County received more money in funding than it made in sales. With 42 Kansas Lottery retailers in Riley County, total sales came to $2.93 million.

The money from the Kansas Lottery is broken down so that 30 cents from every dollar goes to the state. Of that 30 cents, 85 percent goes to the Economic Development Initiative Fund, 10 percent goes to the Correctional Institutions Building Fund, and 5 percent goes to the Juvenile Detention Facilities Fund.

The Kansas Value Added Center at K-State receives a portion of the funds from the Kansas Lottery for economic development programs.

Deborah Hix, director of Foods and Feeds Uses Program, said KVAC received about $880,000 in funding from the Kansas Lottery for this year.

KVAC was developed in 1988 to work cooperatively with K-State.

"On campus, KVAC funds many departments, with the current focus on agriculture," Hix said.

One of the many departments on campus that is funded by KVAC is the Sensory Analysis Center. This center received about $11,000 in funding from KVAC.

"What the Sensory Analysis Center does is take the products that Kansas businesses or individuals bring to KVAC and help them decide if the products are good," said Edgar Chambers IV, director of the Sensory Analysis Center.

"How we do this is try to decide if the product is appealing in both taste and appearance, and how it compares to other products already on the market," Chambers said.

KVAC uses the Sensory Analysis Center and many other campus departments in a team approach. They use a process to help prospective clients take their ideas and turn them into successful business ventures.

"We really stress the team approach because every department on campus has their own place and expertise to contribute," Hix said.

KVAC also funds K-State projects that are beneficial to agricultural production in the state of Kansas.

"One important thing we're working on is teaching Kansas producers to become processors so they can process their own goods to make them more money, which in turn improves the economy in Kansas," Hix said.

KVAC helps students directly on campus by providing funds for equipment used in research labs.

Not only did the state of Kansas benefit from the increased sales, but Kansas Lottery players won more than $92 million in prizes this past fiscal year.

ZAIRE

Zairian troops used trucks, buses and even private vehicles to ferry refugees from the Mugunga camp near Goma to the Rwandan border, U.N. refugee spokesman Chris Bowers said.

Refugees complained about being beaten by soldiers and having their belongings stolen, and smoke billowed from Mugunga after soldiers set fire to some huts to encourage refugees to leave.

Aid workers at Mugunga said Zairian soldiers looted the camp Monday night, U.N. spokesman Ron Redmond said. There were unconfirmed reports of refugee women being raped. Many aid workers, fearing violence, left the camps around Goma on Tuesday.

Bowers said more than 10,000 refugees from three areas in Zaire — Goma, Bukavu and Uvira — were sent across the border Tuesday, but he did not have figures for each border region.

"Let them go," said one Zairian immigration official who refused to give his name. "They have been killing us. They have been stealing from us. They are more than we are."

In Washington, State Department spokesman David Johnson said Zaire was violating international law and could precipitate a "human disaster" if it continues to expel refugees.

Most of the refugees at Goma were women, elderly men and children who seemed resigned to being forced back to Rwanda. They carried plastic buckets of water, straw sleeping mats and bundles of food.

"If they say we must go, we go," said Ngeremenyera Bititwayechi, 50, as he waited at the border for his eight children, who were separated from him during the roundup.

After refugees crossed the border, they were being bused to a U.N. transit camp some 15 miles south of the Rwandan town of Gisenyi.

On the southern edge of Lake Kivu, more than 3,000 Rwandan refugees at Bukavu were forced back into Rwanda on Tuesday and at least 8,000 more were being pushed toward the border, said Kessler.

The United Nations was sending food and aid workers to the Rwandan town of Cyangugu to help those refugees.

Even further to the south, some 60,000 refugees fled into the hills at Uvira with little food or water after four camps there were "looted flat" by Zairians, Bowers said. Those refugees included 25,000 people from Burundi.

"This could bring about a repeat of the deaths we saw last summer," Kessler warned.

An estimated 50,000 Rwandan refugees died of cholera and other diseases in Goma shortly after the panicked exodus of 1.2 million refugees from Rwanda in July 1994.

At the United Nations on Tuesday, the Security Council called for a halt to the expulsions and sent Sadako Ogata, the U.N. commissioner for refugees, to Zaire to discuss the matter with authorities.

"The operation is not being conducted in a humane manner," said Carrol Faubert, the U.N. refugee agency's envoy for the region. "(This is) asylum fatigue, not just in Zaire, but in Tanzania and Burundi, all of which have indicated they would like Rwandan refugees to go home."

Zaire also holds refugees from conflicts in Angola, Sudan and Uganda.

HOW TO HANDLE FOOD IN THE HEAT

Careful shopping. Buy perishables in small quantities. Avoid cream filled foods, pre-made salads and partly thawed frozen foods. Watch shelf-life dates on meat and dairy products especially.

Careful storage. BRefrigerate perishables at 45 degrees or less. Cover storage containers. Keep frozen foods solidly frozen. Refrigerate leftovers immediately.

K-STATE BRIEF

Mary Molt, assistant director of housing, was awarded the 1995 Theodore W. Minah Distinguished Service Award from the National Association of College and University Food Service.

Chi-Lung "Dominic" Huang, a professor at K-State, was honored by the board of the International Biographical Centre in Cambridge, England. He was chosen as an honorary member of the center's advisory council. This is Huang's fifth time to be honored by the center.

When it's too hot to exercise

As you walk across campus or stand in line at drop/add, you can feel it starting. First on your forehead or maybe your neck. Then it works its way down, until you can feel the sweat slowly trickling down your back.

It's hot.

Sure, you can duck inside the K-State Student Union or a campus building to cool off for a while. But if you regularly exercise outside or are taking advantage of the sunny weather to play sports over the weekend, what should you do?

First off, get used to it and take precautions. The temperature, usually in the 80s this time of year, is not going to be going down any time soon.

"We have an upper-level high-pressure system in the area that has been over the Midwest off and on throughout the summer," Andy Weingarten, WIBW meteorologist, said. "This is indefinite. I suspect it will last past Labor Day."

When the heat index, a combination of pressure and humidity, gets too high, that's when it's dangerous to exercise outdoors. Fortunately, there are alternatives on campus.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is open from 6 a.m. to midnight Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and noon to midnight on Sunday. If you feel like taking a dip in a pool, the Natatorium is located in the Ahearn Complex. It is open during several time periods during the day and night and on weekends.

In case you haven't been to the Rec Complex since renovation started, there's good news — it's air-conditioned.

"Now that our building is air-conditioned, it makes the temperature nicer to work out in," Steve Martini, recreation services employee, said. "We've had a lot of people come in during the past few weeks to jog because it's air-conditioned."

As far as intramural competitions go, Martini said they will start at 5 p.m. this fall instead of 4:30 p.m. Martini said this was mainly because of scheduling conflicts with classes, not the heat. However, the Rec Complex does have athletic trainers on staff to deal with people who have problems related to the heat.

"When the heat index is up, we make sure we're getting water out to them," Martini said.

If you do have to be out in the heat, there are some easy ways to make sure you don't get heat exhaustion.

"The most important thing is making sure they replenish fluids," Cindy Burke, director of health education at Lafene Health Center, said. "Lots of fluid is important."

Another tip is to check on the outside temperature and humidity before you start exercising and wear light-colored and lightweight clothing, Burke said.

But don't go from an apartment with the temperature set at 70 degrees out into 100-degree weather and start exercising immediately.

"Make sure you are not pushing yourself in the heat. Make sure that you're used to the heat before you start," Burke said.

A good time to exercise, Burke said, is during the morning or evening — not during the hottest part of the day.

The thing to remember, however, is to use common sense, Martini said.

"When it's that hot and uncomfortable, use your head about whether to exercise," Martini said.

Sunburn

Sunburn is overexposure to the sun. The skin may redden, and blisters may form. Do not apply burn ointment or cold cream to relieve pain in even mild cases. Use a dry dressing and get medical attention for severe, blistered, extensive burns.

Heat exhaustion

Heat exhaustion results from hard physical effort in extreme heat. Symptoms include a pale face, clammy skin, heavy perspiration and possible vomiting. Place the victim in the shade with the head slightly lowered. Loosen clothing and give sips of water. Get medical help.

Heat stroke

Heat stroke is overexposure to sun and heat. Symptoms include a red and dry face, hot skin and high temperature. The victim may lose consciousness. Place the victim on back in the shade, head slightly raised. Loosen clothing and sponge with lukewarm water. Call a physician.

HOUSING

"Most people think the inconvenience is small compared to their safety," Cortese, junior in animal science, said.

Locking doors for 24 hours also has implications for Housing and Dining, Hasan said.

"We have to make accommodations for deliveries, mail, flowers and so on," he said.

Marlatt, Goodnow and Haymaker halls have opted to remain unlocked until midnight.

Staying unlocked as long as possible is a tradition at Marlatt, Rogge said. Last year, Marlatt residents filled out a survey that said they thought being locked down earlier than midnight would be an inconvenience.

Putnam and Van Zile halls are open until 10 p.m.

At Van Zile, there have been no complaints from residents about the early lock-down, said Dustin Springer, junior in elementary special education and hall president.

Moore Hall's doors close at sunset, while West and Ford lock down at 11 p.m.

West, like some other residence halls, has not voted this year on whether to change its lock-down hours.

Sewage leaks into creek spur inquiry

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Reports of old sewer pipes leaking raw sewage into a creek flowing through a park area that the city hopes will become a midwestern tourist attraction has prompted federal and state investigations.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Missouri Department of Natural Resources launched a joint inquiry Monday in response to a report by the Kansas City Star that the $86 million Brush Creek walkway project is plagued by routine raw-sewage spills.

"This situation cannot continue as it is," EPA spokesman Bill Landis said.

Exposure to raw sewage can cause diarrhea, skin infections, hepatitis and other illnesses, said Roger Gibson, chief of community and environmental health for the Missouri Department of Health.

The diseases can be contracted by drinking the water or getting it on an open cut, Gibson said. Even contact with spray from the fountains could be enough to spread disease, he said.

City officials have denied Brush Creek water is a health risk, saying any sewage is heavily diluted with runoff and aerated through pumps, fountains and waterfalls to kill bacteria.

But the city has acknowledged it violated the federal Clean Water Act by not telling the state about two raw-sewage spills documented by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

They said the spills haven't occurred frequently.

In a statement issued Monday, however, the director of the city Department of Water Services said he had started an investigation to determine the extent of the sewage problem.

"We plan to take a hard look at the system, and if there are problems, we will address them promptly," director Gurnie Gunter said. "Public health is our primary concern."

Meantime, the department has assigned an extra two-person crew to clean out sewer pipes that potentially could clog and spill sewage.

TUITION

Floyd is paying full-time tuition in Manhattan because he is taking more than seven hours, Ratzloff said.

Luckily, Floyd said, he won't have to pay for the on-campus fees at the Salina campus.

"He doesn't have to pay the on-campus fees at Salina — those are waived," Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

Beginning in fall 1996, students like Floyd who attend both campuses won't have to pay for two separate colleges, Peterson said.

"A year from now, that problem will be solved," he said.

Linear fees, which has been approved by the Kansas Board of Regents, will take effect at K-State in the spring of 1996, Donald Foster, University registrar, said.

Students will begin paying hourly tuition next year, Foster said.

This means Floyd would only have to pay for the 16 hours he is taking instead of full- and part-time tuition, he said.

COACHING

Nov. 5., and students can volunteer to coach flag football, volleyball and soccer in the fall; basketball and another season of soccer is offered in the spring, and softball and baseball are offered in the summer.

"The length of the season varies from sport to sport, but it usually is around 10 weeks," Buchanan said.

There will be an organizational meeting for coaches Sept. 5 to pick up the names of their players and necessary equipment, he said.

"Volunteers are always needed," Buchanan said.

Kansas City hero honored

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Kansas City teenager will be honored for his bravery this week, nearly two years after he rescued three people from a burning house.

Mychael Ramsey is scheduled to receive the 1993 Young American Medal for Bravery from U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno.

Ramsey, whose misdemeanor drug conviction stalled the decision to give him the award, will be honored at 2 p.m. today in Washington.

The U.S. Justice Department tried for six months to schedule a ceremony at the White House but was never able to arrange a date with President Clinton's staff, Anne Voigt, a Justice Department spokeswoman, said.

"I have mixed emotions," said Etta McKenzie, a south Kansas City business owner who became one of Ramsey's mentors after the fire.

"I'm a little disappointed that we won't get a chance to meet the president, but they said they would try to work it in his schedule to bring us back."

Ramsey, who could not be reached for comment Monday, learned in January that he would receive the award.

But a few days later, the Justice Department said it was reconsidering the award because Ramsey had been arrested for marijuana possession, which would have made him ineligible to receive the award and meet Clinton.

The Young American Medals Program was established by Congress in 1950 to recognize young people for bravery and public service.

Ramsey, then 15, helped three people to safety from a burning home in December 1993.

Cyanide waste spill pollutes river

Associated Press

GEORGETOWN, Guyana — Shoals of dead fish and hogs floated down Guyana's biggest river Tuesday, victims of a cyanide waste spill that continued to escape from a gold mine operated by U.S. and Canadian firms.

More than 325 million gallons of cyanide waste had spilled into the Essequibo River near Omai since Saturday night, turning central Guyana's biggest source of water into a potentially deadly flow. The spill had traveled 50 miles downstream by Tuesday.

Yelling through bullhorns from boats, trucks and low-flying helicopters, health officials plied the river banks to warn some 18,000 Indians, loggers and miners not to touch the water.

The Health Ministry banned people from catching and eating fish, shrimp and other marine life and told farmers not to let their animals drink from the river. Officials began distributing bottled water, but most residents collected rainwater.

"Luckily for us, the rain has been falling every day," said Mike Ross, police inspector for Bartica, a riverside city of 16,000.

Prime Minister Samuel Hinds called the spill Guyana's worst environmental disaster.

It occurred when the retaining wall of a holding pond broke, initially dumping 15.7 million gallons an hour of cyanide-tainted water into the Omai River, which feeds the larger Essequibo. The pond holds 860 million gallons.

Miners saw a herd of dead wild hogs and schools of fish floating down the river, said Stanislaus Jardine, president of the Guyana Gold and Diamond Miners Association. His operation is eight miles downstream from Omai.

Omai Gold Mines Ltd. said it had reduced the rate of spillage by diverting some of the water into the pit of the mine, the second-largest open-pit mine in South America.

The concentration of cyanide in the spilling water was diluted from 15 parts per million Sunday to around three parts per million, the company said. Cyanide can be fatal in concentrations above 2 parts per million. Lower doses ingested over a period of time can cause mental retardation.

Omai Gold Mines is 95 percent owned by Cambior Ltd. of Canada and Golden Star Resources of Denver, and 5 percent owned by Guyana. It shut all operations.

The spill could mean financial disaster for the cash-strapped government. Last year, Guyana received a quarter of its revenue from the mine, which produced 252,000 ounces of gold. It is located in the rain forest about 100 miles west of Georgetown, the capital.

Georgetown is at the mouth of another river — the Demerara — and is not threatened.

Police in Bartica had not spotted any dead fish, but a U.N. report from Geneva said aquatic life in the Omai River and parts of the Essequibo River have been seriously affected.

The Canadian government and the Washington-based Pan American Health Organization were sending experts to the area on Wednesday, U.N. spokesman Gerard Le Claire, said.

It was the second accident in three months at the mine, which began operation in January 1993. In May, a minor spill of sodium cyanide, used to separate gold from crushed rock, killed hundreds of fish and prompted a national debate about the environmental dangers of foreign investment.

▶ ANNIVERSARY

19th Amendment approaches 75th year

■ Vote hinged on young legislator from Tennessee

Associated Press

NIOTA, Tenn. — In the end, the 72-year fight for women's suffrage rested on the shoulders of a 24-year-old, first-term legislator who trusted his conscience — and his mother's advice.

His name was Harry Thomas Burn, and his single ballot — cast on a hot August morning in 1920, at a special session of the Tennessee Legislature — gave millions of women the right to vote.

Congress had passed the 19th Amendment a year earlier; by June, 35 of the 36 states needed for ratification had approved it.

The issue was dead in nine states, and four were undecided: Tennessee, Delaware, Vermont and Connecticut.

Vermont and Connecticut refused to call special legislative sessions. Delaware chose not to take any action.

That left Tennessee. At the urging of President Woodrow Wilson, Gov. Albert Roberts agreed to call a special session.

As the speaker rapped for order, hundreds of women with big floppy hats and floor-length skirts nervously fanned themselves in the nearly 100-degree heat.

Some anxiously waited in the corridors, others crowded the chambers.

"They waged a peaceful revolution for 72 years without firing a single shot," said Paula Casey, president of Woman Suffrage 75 Inc., one of many groups marking the 75th anniversary of women's suffrage on Aug. 26.

The road to Nashville was a difficult one for suffragists. An Oregon senator warned that giving women the right to vote would make every home a hell on earth.

Another politician asserted that women lacked enough judgment to vote while another feared the decay of the family structure.

But the suffragists drew their battle line in Tennessee. It became known as the War of Roses.

Suffrage supporters wore yellow roses, opponents red.

Supporters hurried one legislator, a doctor, back from California to cast his vote.

R.L. Dowlen, recovering from an operation, was carried to the chamber. T.A. Dodson, on his way to see his sick child, was promised a special train if he would remain for the vote, which he did.

But it was a letter from Febb King Ensminger Burn, mother of the state's youngest legislator, that made the difference.

"Dear Son, Hurrah and vote for suffrage! Don' keep them in doubt. I notice some of the speeches against. They were bitter. I have been watching you to see how you stood, but have not noticed anything yet. Don't forget to be a good boy and help Mrs. Catt put rat in ratification."

As Burn went to the gallery that hot morning on Aug. 18, he slipped the letter into his jacket pocket. In his lapel was a red rose.

A motion had been made a day earlier to table the resolution until the next session in January.

The vote ended 48-48, with Burn voting to put the matter off until after November, when he was expected to win re-election.

Speaker Seth Walker called for a second vote after both sides cried a miscount. It, too, was 48-48.

Since the effort to postpone the vote failed, Tennessee had no choice but to vote on the amendment itself.

A tie vote would defeat the amendment. One vote change could defeat or give women the right to vote.

Burn was cautious. He believed women should have voting rights, but his constituents back home in the East Tennessee community of Mouse Creek, now Niota, were divided on the issue.

And, he had a race to run.

"I voted to table the amendment, not in opposition but in hopes that it would come up again at the next sessions after election day," Burn said in a 1970 interview with Look magazine. He died in 1977.

Burn said his mother, a well-read, educated widow, was appalled that her illiterate farmhands could vote on matters concerning her land while she could not, simply because she was a woman.

A hush fell over the chamber as the clerk began the roll call vote.

When the clerk reached the third row to the right of the rostrum, Burn said, "Aye."

There was a dead silence followed by an explosion of cheers and jeers, applause and hisses.

Women hugged, cried, laughed and threw roses in the air.

There is a legend — denied by Burn's son — that a frenzied mob of anti-suffragists pushed to get at Burn, who slipped out an open window, scooted along a narrow ledge and climbed into another open window on the third-floor level.

Burn was accused of taking bribes, and some anti-suffragists even visited Ms. Burn, urging her to deny writing the letter.

She wired the suffrage headquarters that her letter was authentic.

In a statement Burn sent to be on the House floor a day later, he said he changed his mind because he was morally and legally obligated.

"I knew that a mother's advice is always safest for her boy to follow. I appreciated the fact that an opportunity such as this seldom comes to a mortal man to free women from political slavery was mine," he wrote.

On August 26, 1920, the 19th Amendment to the Constitution became law.

Three months later, for the first time in history, women from every state could vote in the presidential election.

And that November, voters in Mouse Creek sent Burn back for another term.

Music scene needs people

Scott Allen Miller
staff writer

Ah, yes, it's back-to-school time here in Manhattan.

Some of you are returning students. Some of you refuse to graduate and get a life. The rest of you are simply freshmen, which means you have an excuse for not knowing better.

About this town's music scene, for example. As of right now, Manhattan's music scene positively sucks.

The entertainment choices you have usually constitute recycled 1980s music played by a DJ, recycled '90s music played by a DJ, CD players playing random music and recycled country music.

Rarely is there live music on the weekends in Aggieville. Why?

The conventional wisdom of club owners goes this way: Women want to go somewhere to dance and drink booze that guys buy, and guys will go to any bar where women show up, no matter what music is playing.

Therefore, the guys stand around trying to look cool, get laid or get so drunk they puke on Moro Street, whichever comes first.

COLUMN

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Meanwhile, the women try to look hot enough that guys will buy them booze, but not necessarily want to sleep with them.

These attitudes create an environment similar to the Kansas City Board of Trade: Everyone's trying to get the best price on the meat they're selling.

The Kansas City Board of Trade, like Aggieville, is not known for its music scene.

Cities like Lawrence; Chaple Hill, N.C.; Dayton, Ohio; Athens, Ga., and Champaign, Ill., are college towns renowned for ass-kicking live music clubs.

It's a matter of whether you, the student, wants live music or whether you will continue to settle for the crap that squirts out of the Aggieville clubs on weekends now.

People complain there's nothing to do in Manhattan. They're right. But there's nothing to do in Manhattan because almost no one wants to do anything.

Most students' attitudes go something like Kurt Cobain's parody, "Here we are now/entertain us." Most people want the entertainment to just show up and happen for free.

If you get off your asses and go to see a band at a club, even if they suck, you will be sending a signal to club owners that you and other students will show up to hear new music rather than just the worst hits of the '80s.

Then, over time, better and more popular bands will come to Manhattan clubs in much the same way they come to Lawrence.

Club Berlin is trying to bring live music to Manhattan on a fixed day every week. Granted, that day won't be on a weekend, but it will be either Wednesday or Thursday.

Show up at Berlin, folks! Pay a few bucks, see the bands who will be playing in the coming weeks, buy drinks, tip the bartenders, and — this is important, too — give the bands plenty of applause. If you give the bands the response they deserve, they'll want to come back again.

Then, maybe by the time the freshmen are seniors, there will be a live music scene in this town.

Representative considers resignation

Rep. Mel Reynolds was convicted of criminal sexual assault Tuesday. A spokesperson said, "He does not want to prolong the agony and pain by fighting it out in Congress, so he's going to resign."

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Rep. Mel Reynolds is considering resigning from Congress as he faces a prison sentence for sexual misconduct and a continuing federal investigation of his finances.

Reynolds was convicted Tuesday of criminal sexual assault, which carries a mandatory minimum four-year sentence, for having sex with a former campaign worker when she was 16 and 17. He also was found guilty of asking her to get him lewd photographs of a 15-year-old girl and trying to sabotage the investigation of the case.

Reynolds would not comment Wednesday and his attorneys did not return phone calls while preparing to appeal his case. Prosecutors want him jailed during the appeal process, but have not said what sentence they will seek.

The conviction does not automatically remove Reynolds from his House seat. But a Reynolds confidant said the congressman told him he will resign soon.

"He can hang on and try to weather an ethics committee investigation or inquiry, but he doesn't want to go through that," said Nate Clay, who said Reynolds called him several times Wednesday. "He didn't want to put his family through that.

"He does not want to prolong the agony and the pain by fighting it out in Congress, so he's going to resign," Clay told the Associated Press.

Other observers questioned why Reynolds would be so quick to leave his $133,600 yearly salary.

"I just don't know where he would get a job for $11,000 a month and he's really got financial problems," said Paul Green, a Governors State University political scientist. "My gut feeling would be he would stretch it out just as long as he can."

U.S. Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun, D-Ill., called on Reynolds to resign. Other politicians, including Democratic Mayor Richard M. Daley, Republican Gov. Jim Edgar and House Speaker Newt Gingrich said it was Reynolds' decision.

The House ethics committee could open its own investigation and recommend expulsion, censure or reprimand of Reynolds. The panel's recommendation is not binding on the full House.

Reynolds' political career, however,

You might say Steven Graham found K-State in Africa.

"That's where I heard about the wonderful research they are doing here," Graham said.

Graham, newly appointed assistant to the dean of agriculture, worked with village farmers in Africa and learned that farmers love what they do.

"When I joined the Peace Corps, I ended up in the agricultural program and worked in areas related to agriculture, but not necessarily farming," Graham said.

As assistant to the dean, Graham will be responsible for organizing reports and responses to legislative committees, the Kansas Board of Regents and University administrators.

"It is in this position that I can take my farm background, business degree and international Peace Corps experience and tie it all together," Graham said.

Graham will add a broad perspective to operations in the Agricultural Experiment Station, the Cooperative Extension Service and the College of Agriculture,

After 15 years with the Kansas Wheat Commission, Steven Graham is taking on new tasks as assistant to the dean and director of agriculture at K-State. Graham graduated from K-State in 1981 with a masters degree in grain science.

Marc Johnson, dean of agriculture, said.

"He has been in the state for about 17 years, and in terms of marketing the college of agriculture, the experiment station and the extension office, he has a background that was very attractive to us," Johnson said.

Graham worked with the Peace Corps and a private consultant in both western and eastern Africa marketing modern grain storage from 1973 to 1977.

After participating in the Peace Corps, he earned a master of science in grain science and industry at K-State and joined the Kansas Wheat

Act would eliminate some federal funding

Dana Harding
staff reporter

The Freedom to Farm Act is going to give farmers more freedom to choose their own crops while slashing federal funding.

The bill would scrap farm programs for wheat, rice, feed grains, oil seeds and cotton and replace them with one program.

On Aug. 4, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., and chairman of the Subcommittee on General Commodities, Rep. William Barrett, R-Neb., introduced the bill.

Co-signer of the bill, Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said he believes Kansas growers will be able to adapt to the changes over a steady transition period.

"Kansas farmers are good, sharp operating entities. What I worry about most is how other countries will adjust to our programs and whether they'll get predatory on our farm production system," he said.

Other countries could subsidize their farmers or attempt to undercut U.S. farm prices, which could hurt U.S. farmers.

The Freedom to Farm Act will allow farmers to farm for the market place. They will no longer plant crops to just maintain base or collect government payments. The payments will no longer provide protection if prices take an unexpected decline.

However, if the price increases and the grower suffers a crop loss because of weather or natural disasters so that there are no bushels to sell at the higher prices, then the grower still receives the average price based on what yields should have been.

The same grower under the present program would receive no payment or a reduced payment.

The total budget for wheat payments will be set and fixed for each of the seven years. The payment will decrease in each new year because the fixed budget for wheat and other program crops will decline.

For example, assume that a Kansas wheat grower has 20,000 bushels in the program including the grower's owned and rented land shares.

If federal government decides to spend $1.4 billion on wheat payments, and growers enroll $1.7 billion program bushels, then the payment rate would be 0.8235. The example farm would receive 0.8235 times 20,000 program bushels for a total farm payment of $16,470.

Under the proposed legislation, feed grain and wheat growers who have participated in at least three out of the last five years (1991 to 1995) in the acreage reduction programs are eligible.

Subway finding success in the K-State Union

Brent Johnson
staff reporter

Location is the key.

Subway has found success since its move into the K-State Student Union in the spring semester of 1995.

"I have been told that of the 48 to 50 Subway stores owned by Rottinghaus Company Inc., our store is the top-seller during the school year," James Edwards, general manager, said.

Edwards has worked at other Subway stores in Manhattan, and he said the store located in the Union is by far the busiest.

"Our busiest time is the lunch rush," Edwards said. "We require at least six properly trained employees to handle it."

Subway shares basement space in the Union with the Union Recreational Area.

"Ever since we lost our bowling classes, we lost some exposure," Terri Eddy, recreation department manager, said. "Now, people come down here seeking out the Subway name, and they discover that we're here."

Edwards said he has seen countless times where people come down to the recreation area to bowl or play pool, only to later stay and eat some food.

"It's really convenient for students to eat here because if they don't have transportation, or if the weather is bad, they don't have

McDowell Creek Road repairs on hold

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

McDowell Creek Road, which was damaged by flooding in May, might not be repaired until spring 1996 or 1997.

The paved road, which slid down the side of a hill last spring, has been replaced by a gravel road.

Geotechnical studies revealed that the flood of 1993 caused for the road damage, which might cost up to $500,000 to repair.

A combination of torrential rains in May and the flooding caused a 1,400-foot section of the road, which is 2-1/2 miles south of the junction with Kansas Highway 177, to break off and slide west. The section of road also dropped 25 feet in some areas.

No houses were affected by the damage, but about 1,000 vehicles travel the road each day, including K-State personnel going to the Konza prairie research facilities in the area.

Although the road didn't show any damage until May, the 1993 flood caused the hill east of the road to start moving west.

"We actually did $5,002 worth of repairs on the hill in 1993," Dan Harden, Riley County public works director, said. "So the problem really started back in 1993 with the flood."

With the geotechnical study finished, preparations for the road repairs have begun. Harden said the first step in the repair process was to accept proposals from design firms to be taken in front of county officials for approval.

"We narrowed it down to a few contractors last Friday," Harden said. "Then I will go in front of the commissioners next week to make a decision on what contractor that we will use.

"Then we will have to go through several review boards."

The construction plans have to go through review boards because funding for the road repairs will come from the 1993 flood-relief funds that were set

CAPTURE OF ISLAMIC MILITANT ADVERTS MORE ISRAELI ATTACKS

JERUSALEM — The arrest of an Islamic militant suspected of masterminding two recent suicide bombings narrowly averted more attacks against Israelis, the head of Israel's secret service said Wednesday.

The capture of Abdel Nasr Issa and 29 accomplices dealt a severe blow to Hamas, or the Islamic Resistance Movement, which has threatened to turn life in Israel into a terror-laden nightmare.

Issa's arrest on Saturday led Israeli agents to an apartment filled with chemicals and bomb-making equipment and a car packed with explosives, said the chief of the Shin Bet security service, who by law cannot be identified.

The arrested militants represented the infrastructure of the military wing of Hamas in the West Bank, he said. "This will prevent future attacks."

Hamas has unleashed dozens of deadly attacks on Israelis in its campaign to halt the Israel-PLO peace process, and there have been warnings in recent weeks that the group would stage more suicide bombings to block the signing of an expanded autonomy agreement, expected by next month.

Issa revealed nothing about plans for a suicide bus bombing Monday in Jerusalem. Five people, including an American teacher, were killed in the blast.

133,000 REFUGEES FLEE ZAIRE

GOMA, Zaire — Terrified by Zairian soldiers trying to force them back to their hostile homelands, more than 133,000 refugees from Rwanda and Burundi have bolted from refugee camps into the countryside, carrying scant food and water and raising fears of new epidemics and mass starvation.

"Getting any assistance to them is going to be impossible, and we don't know how long they can last out there in those conditions," Ron Redmond, a spokesman for the U.N. refugee agency in Geneva, said Wednesday.

The Clinton administration demanded an immediate end to the expulsions. But Zaire — which had warned the United Nations of the expulsions — said it would continue to force the refugees back across the border.

SAT MATH SCORES INCREASE

WASHINGTON — High school graduates turned in their best scores in years on the 1995 Scholastic Assessment Test, including the highest math average in two decades.

Asian Americans are still at the top with whites close behind, but other minority students have made broad gains in recent years. Boys remained ahead of girls, but girls are moving faster up the scholastic steps, according to scores released for the just-revised entrance exam, the most widely used by colleges.

Education Secretary Richard W. Riley attributed improvements to students taking tougher classes, especially math and science.

The national average on the verbal test increased from 423 in 1994 to 428 in 1995, while math scores rose from 479 to 482.

K-State workshop to highlight responsibility

Katie Thomas
staff reporter

Encouraging student responsibility and preventing dishonesty in the classroom will be the focus of a campus workshop Friday.

"Academic honesty is an issue that needs to be addressed here at K-State and at other institutions," Stephen Scheneman, leader in professional and organizational development, said.

Academic honesty is timely and important enough to discuss, said John Havlin, professor in agronomy and chairman of Committee on Effective Instruction.

"The students want a higher education, and the faculty wants to deliver it," Havlin said.

The workshop, entitled "Enhancing Student Learning Through Academic Honesty," will feature Stephen Davis, consultant and professor of psychology at Emporia State University.

Davis has done a considerable amount of work dealing with academic honesty, including research, articles and presentation, Scheneman said.

During the workshop, a panel discussion with members of the Provost's Task Force on Academic Honesty will be moderated by Gerald Reeck, chairman of the task force.

WORKSHOP

▶ The workshop "Enhancing Student Learning Through Academic Honestly" will be from 1:15 to 4 p.m. Friday in the Big 8 Room at the K-State Student Union.

Faculty will be able to discuss academic honesty with other faculty and graduate students in a workshop format, Havlin said.

Helping faculty members improve their instructional method is the goal of bringing speakers and workshops, like academic honesty, to K-State, said Linda Martin, associate professor in animal sciences and industry and member of the Committee on Effective Instruction.

The workshop, which is part of the College of Agriculture series on "Enhancing Teaching Effectiveness in Agriculture," is open to all K-State faculty and graduate students.

The series is funded by the U. S. Department of Agriculture Higher Education Office and sponsored by the Committee on Effective Instruction.

Task force examines cheating

Katie Thomas
staff reporter

Encouraging academic honesty is the focus of a student and faculty supported K-State task force.

"It's always tempting to cheat, but it's not worth getting thrown out of the university," Liz Ring, senior in history, said.

K-State has a lot of avenues to help students who are having problems. Students can get tutors and should get to know the faculty and graduate teaching assistants, Ring said.

Provost James Coffman developed the Provost Task Force on Academic Honesty last fall to examine the issue of academic honesty in the classroom, said Gerald Reeck, professor in biochemistry and chairman of Provost's Task Force on Academic Honesty.

"K-State is no worse than anywhere else, it's a nation-wide issue. We should take pride in dealing openly with the issue," Reeck said.

The task force concentrates on reviewing current policy statements about academic honesty and finding methods of teaching and testing to promote learning and honesty.

It is also concentrating on the possibility of operating under an honor code system and educating faculty and students of their expectations under a new system, Reeck said.

Faculty, students and administrators serve on the task force.

"I think the most important thing is that this is a place to get an education. You're hurting yourself and others when you cheat," said Brad Finkeldei, senior in chemical engineering and member of the task force.

Linda Martin, associate professor in animal sciences and industry, said she puts a lot of trust in her students.

"We need to remind ourselves that we've worked hard to establish our reputations, and we don't want to do anything to destroy them," Martin said.

Members of the task force wants input and response to the work they've done, and the upcoming workshop on academic honesty will give them that opportunity, Reeck said.

"We cannot look simply at students to solve the problem, and students cannot simply look at faculty to solve the problem. We must work together constantly if we are going to make any head way with this issue," Reeck said.

The task force plans to have final recommendations to Provost Coffman by the end of this semester, Reeck said.

"This may complete the task force's work, but it begins the campus work of emphasizing learning," Reeck said.

1 Marine recruit dies, 5 injured after being struck by lightning bolt

Associated Press

PARRIS ISLAND, S.C. — Lightning from a storm that came out of nowhere struck a group of Marine recruits on a rifle range today, killing one and injuring five.

Their names were not immediately released.

A spokesman said they were members of the 1st Recruit Training Battalion.

The storms came out of nowhere, said Capt. John. Church, a spokesman for the Parris Island training base.

Instructors saw the lightning flashes and ordered the rifle practice halted around 7:10 a.m., he said.

The Marines were marching to a covered area when they were hit by the lightning bolt about five minutes later, he said.

The recruits were taken to the Naval Hospital in Beaufort, where one was pronounced dead and the others were being treated.

Information on the condition of the injured was not immediately released.

Lack of crime lulls students into carelessness

Paranoia isn't a healthy thing, but a sense of security certianly is.

It's been a quiet start so far.

Sure, the usual mayhem has broken loose on campus — fee payment in Ahearn Field House, book buying at the K-State Student Union Bookstore and the indescribable initiation into this University known as drop/add.

But for the first time in a long time, K-State hasn't had any violent crime the first week of school.

Last semester, it was an unresolved student death. Last August, it was a rape.

As a result, students haven't been getting the same safety drill that immediately follows crime.

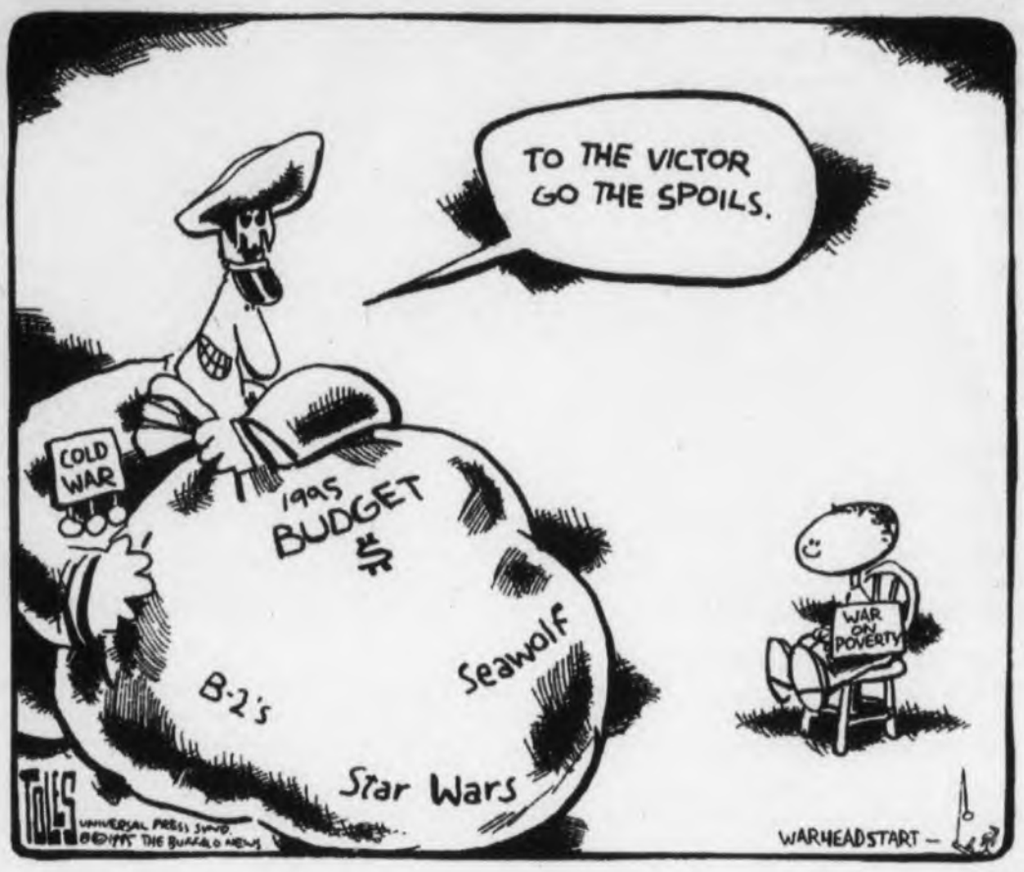
No articles in the Collegian, no programs in the residence halls. It's as though nothing like that would happen again.

But it could.

We can't control the possibility of violence — of rape, beatings or worse — but we can do our best to avoid it.

Don't be lulled into a sense of protection. Don't walk alone at night — on or off campus. Don't drink alcohol and lose your sense of surroundings. Don't forget to lock your door. Don't go home from the bars with people you don't know.

Do you know for certain your friends won't ditch you in Aggieville this weekend without a ride? Do you know absolutely no one else has a key to your apartment?



Would your friends or roommates notice if you were late, or if you didn't come home at all?

Paranoia isn't a healthy thing, but a sense of security certainly is.

Hopefully there will be no front-page stories about fights or sexual assaults this semester.

Hopefully, you'll make sure that it doesn't happen to you.

Vacation hurts!

A writer's thoughts on beer, kids, Happy Meals and M&Ms

This is the first official week of the fall semester, and I know that most of you have three burning questions you immediately want answered:

1) "How much beer do we have left?"

2) "Where can we get more beer?" and

3) "What did the Seabourn family do on their summer vacation?"

Actually, the first two questions are of continual concern throughout the school year, while the third is asked on occasion and only after having consumed large quantities of the beverage sought in question two.

From extensive, past, personal experience, I can safely answer the first two questions with "none" and "Aggieville" — unless of course it is late Saturday night and you are already IN Aggieville, in which case only the first answer applies. The only burning question in this unfortunate situation is, "Why am I wearing my underwear on my head?"

In my pre-marital, pre-fatherhood, pre-total chaos years (which are normally associated with college life and the simple fundamentals of food, beer and sex), I vaguely recall having asked myself the underwear question hundreds of times.

After careful consideration, I have since concluded that this question rightfully belongs alongside other universal questions regarding the origins of life and our ultimate purpose in the universe, because the answer is, "I don't know — but let's drink another beer and think about it."

As for the Seabourn family vacation, let me say up front that my first choice was the Coors beer factory in Golden, Colo., which would have put me in the envious position of being able to take care of all three questions in a single stroke; however, my wife had other ideas.

My wife's idea of a vacation is to put the whole family in the car, hit the open road leaving our problems far behind and drive mile after mile after carefree mile, sometimes driving 1.75 carefree miles before starting a major (8.5 on the Richter scale) marital argument while grade-school thermonuclear war erupts in the back seat.

Don't let any of this alarm you. Statistics show that this form of harmonious, motorized travel is normal among families composed of more than one person. This type of carefree interpersonal phenomenon even occurs in Congress and other forms of life with limited intelligence.

Our destination under these lighthearted conditions was the Colorado Rocky Mountains — also known as The Great Outdoors. Fortunately, we arrived with only a few carefree minor cuts, contusions, and abrasions — had it not been for my fatherly wisdom (survival instinct) combined with vast quantities of McDonald's Happy Meals, I shudder to think of the consequences. If I have learned anything as a father, it is the fact that children acquire a dependence upon food early in life:

Father-to-be (five seconds after baby's conception): "Did you hear that? What was that noise?"

Mother-to-be (five seconds after Father-to-be's stupid question): "That was the baby eating a Happy Meal."

TRAVEL TIP: If you can master the technique of holding the steering wheel with one hand while tossing huge quantities of multi-colored, non-nutritional, sugar concentrates (junk food) in the general direction of gnashing, juvenile teeth, you will survive most any family journey, assuming of course you don't run out of multi-colored, non-nutritional, sugar concentrates ("Dustin, you can take that sawed-off shotgun away from your father's head now — I found the 50-pound bag of M&Ms.").

Of course, the whole purpose of traveling to The Great Outdoors is to breathe the clean, fresh air, feel the warm sunshine on your face, view the cool, green, lush mountain valleys, hear the cry of the wolf and the scream of the eag- ... "HOLY COW! I'M STANDING IN AN ANT DEN! Please (swat) ... somebody help me (swatswat) ... get these ... HELLLLLP!" ("Wow, Mommy! I didn't know Daddy could run that fast with both hands covering his private parts.")

One can also experience the awesome, destructive force of nature in The Great Outdoors. Without doubt, the most awesome, destructive force in nature is my 7-year-old son, Dustin. While most people naturally marvel at the complex and intricate design of inanimate objects, my son can only wonder how long it will take him to reduce complex and intricate inanimate objects into their fundamental atomic components ("Dad, how was I to know the blender would explode in a Tasmanian frenzy, spewing tiny Power Ranger parts all over the ceiling?"). Such was our hike through the Arapaho National Forest.

COLUMN

BRAD SEABOURN

First forest ranger: "Jeez, Bill! Would you look at these trees! There must be 200 trees with ALL the bark stripped clean! What do you make of that?"

Second forest ranger: "I don't know, Jim. I've never seen anything like it. Bears maybe, possibly a large herd of really pissed, carnivorous, winged beavers ... I just don't know."

Me: "Honey, where is Dustin?"

My wife: "He said he was going to go look at trees."

Me: "AND YOU LET HIM DO IT? HAVEN'T YOU SEEN PICTURES OF HIROSHIMA AFTER THEY DROPPED THE BOMB?"

■ Adrian Fleming

All in all, it was a fun vacation. It gave me an opportunity to spend quality time with my kids while planting hundreds of new trees for the U.S. Forest Service.

Dustin: "Dad, why do trees have bark?"

Me: "I don't know son, but I am going to have another beer, plant some more trees and give it some serious thought. Here, have some M&Ms."

Dustin: "Thanks, Dad. Looking at trees makes me hungry."

Helpful hints hurled at incoming 'newbies' from seasoned columnist

This column is dedicated to every new student who has just arrived at these hallowed halls of learning.

Because most new students depend on the formal brochures and propaganda they receive in the mail to discover how things work on this campus (as I did), I will now attempt to fill in the blanks that these well-intentioned, somewhat cheesy pamphlets leave out.

After all, I have been a new student before, and no one took me aside to tell me these things, so I will save you the hassle of discovering them for yourselves.

After attending this fine institution for a year, I have discovered that the word "parking" does not mean the same thing it does throughout the rest of the world. The concept that parking was a way to reduce the time it would take just to walk that far anyway never really got through anyone's head in the think tank that is commonly referred to as Parking Services.

COLUMN

JEREMY STEPHENS

Rather, having a parking pass will generally only ensure that you get to park in the same state, which is better than some parts of the world but does not really use the concept of parking to its full potential.

In fact, I have heard rumors that the freshly discovered remains of a 3,000-year-old man found in the Himalayas was actually a ticketer for Parking Services who accidentally crossed the land bridge to Asia while dutifully policing the outskirts of the B-2 parking lot.

Secondly, fee payment is the only way anyone could think of to force you to voluntarily give away large amounts of money while facing the risk of being knocked unconscious by being pelted by coupon books, newspapers and flyers.

My advice is to remember what your mother said: Don't talk to strangers. For those of you who got subscriptions to virtually every paper in the Midwest, live and learn. Next time, just say no and stick with the journalistic excellence of the Collegian.

On a separate note, fee payment is also an environmentalist's worst nightmare. After doing some very unscientific calculations, I computed that more than 26 trees died for every day of fee payment, and the hole in the ozone layer expanded by approximately 4 percent.

How much of that junk do you think gets recycled? I bring this up to encourage all environmentally concerned people to refuse to take any propaganda next semester in the hopes that some of them will go away and leave the rest of us alone.

Finally, drop/add is a nice idea if you are trying to add a class that most people don't need. For example, silage technology, which will teach you all you want to know about silos, is still available to the best of my knowledge.

Although most colleges won't accept this as a substitute for expository writing or general psychology, it is a good way to broaden your horizons and make yourself a more complete person.

For those of you who are in engineering, don't forget to have your drop/add form signed by your advisor, dean, next of kin, high-school shop teacher and family physician, or you will be sent on a scavenger hunt until all these signatures have been obtained, regardless of the fact that the drop/add period might be over before you do.

While on your adventure finding all the signatures you will need, don't forget to bring your handy map with you, although I advise against holding it in front of you while you walk to avoid walking into people, looking like a newbie, and most of all, the map is mostly worthless unless you have perfect eyesight and can read the index at the bottom.

While this is not a complete list of everything you will need to know, it will make your transition to this campus slightly easier than if you had to learn it all on your own.

▶ MENTAL HEALTH

Homesickness, anxiety are common student problems

Melissa Hoyt
staff writer

The first day of classes, buying books, meeting a new roommate or writing the biggest check of your life can make anyone wish for home sweet home.

Don't worry, though. There is help out there for anyone feeling like they should be packing for home.

University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center is available for students to go and talk.

Ellie Wiemerslage, psychology intern at University Counseling Services, said there is no standard recipe for curing homesickness.

"People have to look at what they are missing," she said.

Wiemerslage said it isn't always homesickness that is bothering people.

It sometimes is anxiety, academic performance or an identity shift.

"There are several different options for people feeling homesick," Wiemerslage said.

"They can come in for an individual counseling session and talk about the adjustment. If the feeling is long-term, there are support groups," Wiemerslage said.

Students around campus have different ways of dealing with homesickness.

Emma Manning, sophomore in psychology, said she was homesick her freshman year.

"Last year, I was awful," Manning said.

Manning said her cure for her homesickness was simply getting out of her residence hall room.

"Just go for a walk as soon as you get out — you will feel better," Manning said.

Manning said as soon as people get out, they start meeting friends, and the homesick feeling starts to go away.

One way of meeting people is to live in a group organization like the residence halls.

Manning said she would recommend living in the residence halls for meeting people.

"This year is better. Mostly because I think practically my whole dorm floor from last year is living in my apartment complex," Manning said.

Although weekend visits home help, Manning said going home every weekend is not the answer.

"The best thing to do is not to go home every weekend," Manning said. "It is terrible trying to make yourself come back on Sunday nights if you go home."

Tammi Rutledge, sophomore in social work, said she didn't really get homesick.

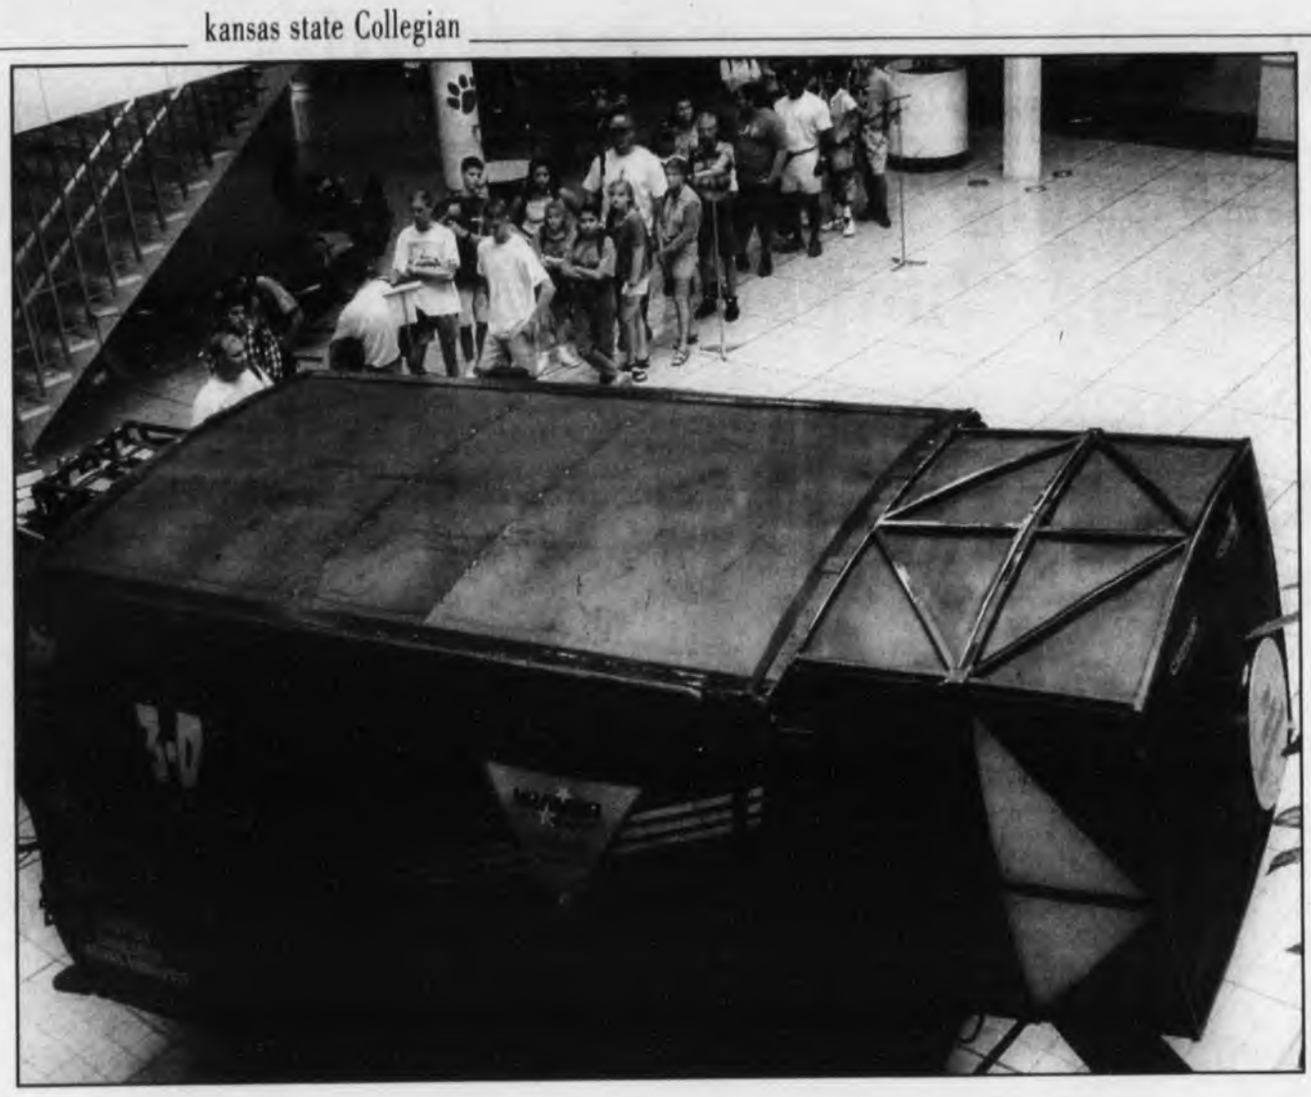
"I missed my parents, but I got out and didn't sit around," Rutledge said.

Rutledge said she avoided getting homesick by just walking into someone's room and introducing herself.

"They are not going to tell you to get out, because if they do, you really don't want to be their friend anyway," Rutledge said.

Amy Sutton, assistant director of Strong Complex, said it is a natural part of coming to school for residents to be homesick, but most can find friends.

"Our hall governing board tries to schedule activities to get residents involved," Sutton said.



Sutton said some of the activities that have happened in the last few weeks were the all-hall meeting, movie night and bowling at the Union night.

Sutton said residents also went to the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls Welcome Back Dance in a group.

K-State volleyball: A happenin' sport

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

I hate to say it like this, but sometimes you have to be blunt — you'd have to be dumber than wallpaper paste to ignore K-State volleyball this fall.

The times they are a changin'. The days of losin' volleyball are over here in Manhappenin'. And I call it that because big things are happenin' — they're happenin' fast. Jim Moore was hired away from Northern Michigan University, where he posted a 123-55 record in five years, to coach the Cats in 1994. Most of those losses must have come early in his career because by the time he got here you'd have thought the man had forgotten how to lose.

When Moore came to K-State, he had just been named NCAA Division II Coach of the Year after leadin' his Wildcats (Yeah, NMU is the Wildcats — is that an omen, or what?) to a national championship.

In his first year in Manhappiness — and I call it that because that's how we'll be feelin' when we start rackin' up the wins — Moore guided K-State to a 14-13 record and a sixth place finish in the Big 8.

Now I know that 14-13 isn't goin' to win Moore any awards. But when you consider the Cats hadn't posted a winnin' record since 1988 (yes, Ronald Reagan was still president and the ozone layer was still the world's leadin' blocker), you kinda feel like shakin' the man's hand.

Moore's, not Reagan's.

Of course, Moore has had some help along the way. K-State has more than a couple good volleyball players on the team.

Yolanda Young, a junior outside hitter, was selected as an alternate for the Olympic Festival this summer. And don't think the accolades will stop there.

Chosen to the second-team all-Big 8 last season, Young promises to be one of the most dynamic players in the conference.

And if you want to spike on the Wildcats this year, you better get on up. Not only did the Cats lead the Big 8 in blocks last year, they're returnin' three of the conference's 10 leadin' blockers.

Senior Jill Dugan was the No. 1 blocker in the Big 8 last year, with juniors Kate DeClerk and Debbie Miller rankin' third and eighth.

K-State's schedule will provide the team with ample opportunity to demonstrate its progress.

The Cats play five matches against opponents ranked in the top 12 by the American Volleyball Coaches Association.

K-State will open the season travelin' to AVCA No. 4 Long Beach State. Big Eight play will see the Cats in home-and-away series with No. 2 Nebraska and No. 12 Colorado.

No, we're not likely to win all five matches, but don't be surprised when we upset someone big this season.

How much would you pay for this kind of excitement?

For a limited time, through this special Student Governing Association offer, you can see every K-State home volleyball match for less than it costs to skip class.

That's right — you've already paid for your season tickets. So why not go to a few games? The action is non-stop, the crowd is lively, and the popcorn is out of this world.

So make it an extra-long day of K-State athletics this fall. Tailgate with your buds before the football game. Yell and scream and stomp and send your friends on a one-way up the student section durin' the game.

Grab yourself a cold one (and I recommend a cold Coca-Cola for all you minors out there) at the local waterin' hole.

Then plant yourself in Ahearn Field House for a raucous night of K-State volleyball.

Taking on challenges

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Women's cross country coach Terry Drake is an optimist, no matter the situation. Considering his predicament, he has to be.

The day before workouts began, Drake received a letter from sophomore Charity Swartz, last year's top runner, stating that she was leaving the team for personal reasons. Couple that with the fact he had to introduce eight new runners to the returning squad, and it could have gotten Drake depressed in a hurry.

But Drake isn't going to pack it up so soon, especially with the talent the newcomers possess, and even without Charity Swartz, the team's goals remain the same.

"I don't think the goals have changed a bit from what we've talked about when we recruited these girls," Drake said. "Our goals are to go to nationals and do well once we get there and build for the future."

In building for the future, Drake recruited some of the best runners in the state. Cristy Swartz (Charity's sister), Lindsay Moser, Jenny Cassidy, Alison Canny, Emily Diederich and Amy Marra were all high-school standouts while Michelle Fields shined in junior college.

"We're going to depend highly on our freshmen," Drake said. "We've got four true freshmen and one redshirt, and between those five girls are 28 state championships. So as far as the last two years go, they've dominated the state, and I look for them to continue the same dominance (at KSU)."

The loss of Charity Swartz leaves the Wildcats with a gaping hole in the lineup. Swartz was K-State's top finisher in five of the team's six meets and placed 50th at the NCAA meet in 1994.

"She wrote me a letter and felt that she did not want to run any more," Drake said. "And basically, that was all she told me in the letter. I don't think it has anything to do with the program or the school."

Drake, who had not yet spoken to Swartz about leaving the team, said the decision caught him by surprise.

"I didn't see it coming because we talked over the summer about getting ready, so it took me back a little bit," he said.

The departure of Charity Swartz puts senior Irma Betancourt into the No. 1 spot of the lineup. Drake thinks Betancourt is more than ready for the challenge.

"Irma's back and in her first practice — she looked good," Drake said. "She's been training hard over the summer, and I definitely look to her to be No. 1. She's been a little gun-shy of cross country in the past, but she really wants to do well in it this year."

The rest of the lineup is wide open, and several freshmen could fill those positions. Moser, from Olathe, won the 5A title in 1992 and 1993 but missed last year's state meet because of injuries.

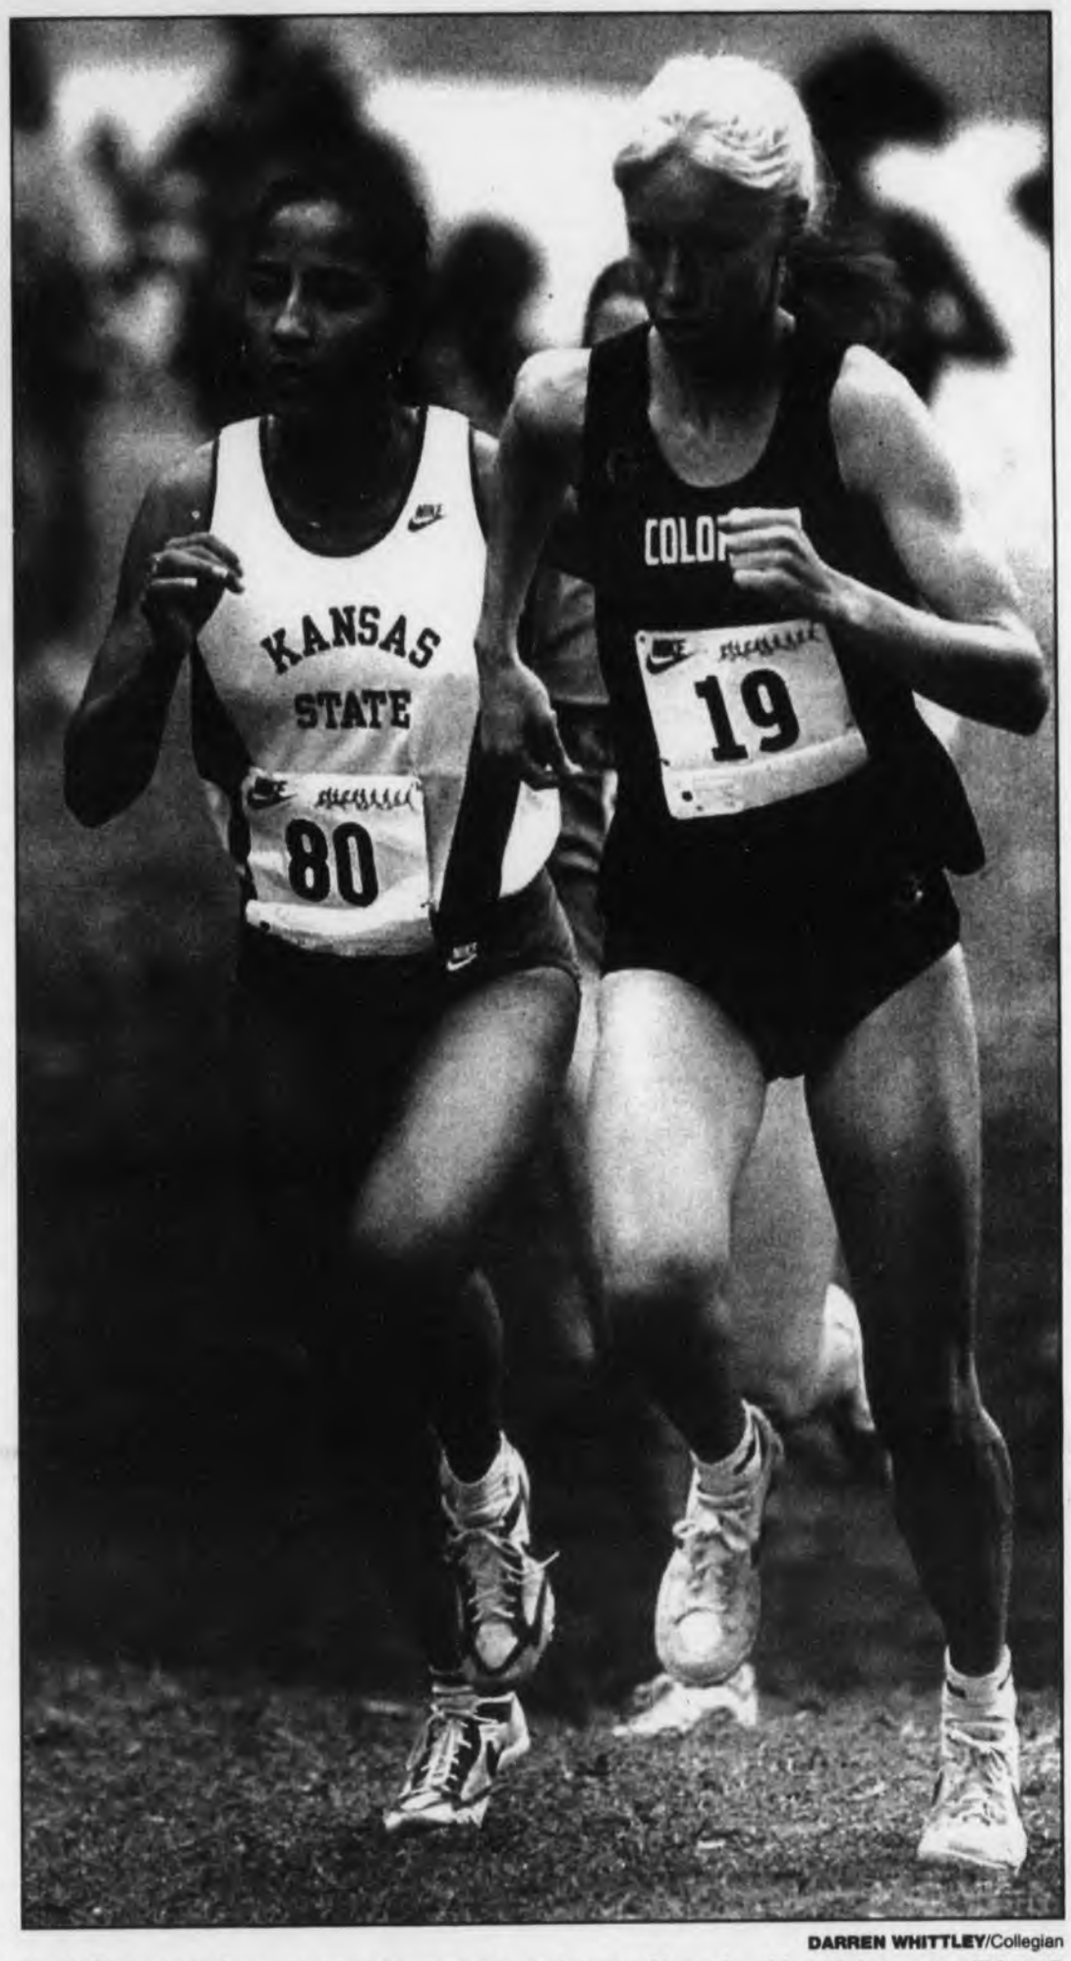
"She's just been a winner, and she's very level-headed and very competitive," Drake said.

In her high-school career, Cristy Swartz, from Andover, won seven state titles in cross country and track.

"As far as domination goes in the last couple years, Cristy has probably been it in the state," Drake said. "She's really been one of the dominant distant runners in the state of Kansas for the last three years."

In the early parts of the season, Drake said, the most important thing for the Wildcats is to come together as a team.

"Cross country tends to more of a team-oriented sport," he explained. "The success of the team is going to depend on how well they group together as a team."



Drake said it could take some time for the newcomers to realize they aren't top dog anymore.

"The hardest thing for them to adjust to is, even though it's a very team-oriented sport, none of these girls have ever been their No. 2 person on a team, and now not only is one going to be No. 2, one's going to be No. 3 and one's going to be No. 4, so sometimes it can be an adjustment for a freshman."

If the team's reaction to Charity Swartz's decision is a barometer, Drake's goal may be met very quickly.

"In fact, I've been very impressed by how they're understanding of, 'OK, now we need to step up a little more,'" Drake said.

"Yes, Charity is not here, but it's not changed our goals of what we want to accomplish, but it makes them a little harder."

Returners will bolster offensive line

▶ Blamed for the Aloha Bowl loss, the offensive line returns with talent, size, and experience.

Shana Newell
contributing writer

If there was a loose brick in the K-State powerhouse during last year's loss to Boston College in the Aloha Bowl, many felt it was the offensive line.

Because of the virtual anonymity which shrouds the offensive line, they're easy to blame.

With the loss of Barrett Brooks and Jim Hmielewski to the NFL, Coach Bill Snyder had to do some rearranging to maintain the much-needed protection for this year's starting quarterback, Matt Miller.

The offensive line, however, returns five players who started from last season, making Snyder's job somewhat easier.

Replacing Barrett Brooks at left tackle will be junior Chris Oltmanns, 6 feet 6 inches, 305 pounds. Oltmanns started all twelve of the Wildcat's games last season in the right guard position.

Snyder had Oltmanns, naturally a tackle, switched inside to allow veteran Brooks to man the left tackle spot.

With the exit of Brooks and the addition of Miller, Snyder will be moving Oltmanns to left tackle to provide the extra protection needed in that spot.

Senior Scott Heun, 6' 4", 295 pounds, will replace Hmielewski at right tackle.

A third-year transfer from Hutchinson Community College, Heun played as Hmielewski's backup in 1994.

Junior transfer from Garden City Community College Eric Janeau and redshirt freshman Ryan Young are expected to compete for the backup right tackle position.

Returning at center is junior Jason Johnson (6'-2", 270 pounds). Johnson returns to Wildcat football healthy after a broken wrist caused him to miss spring drills.

"Jason Johnson runs everything. He calls the blocking schemes, and he's real good at that. I can't remember the last time he made a mistake with a call," Ross Greenwood, junior offensive guard, said.

Junior Toosavili "Tiny" Ulutu, 6' 1", 290 pounds, showed great promise in spring drills and as Johnson's backup will no doubt see considerable action.

Greenwood 6' 3," 300 pounds, is returning at left guard. Greenwood missed the last two games of the 1994 season due to an injury to his anterior cruciate ligament, which is located in the back of the knee. But post-season surgery and a rehabilitative spring has ensured his return to the Wildcat roster and a starting position.

With the movement of Oltmanns to left tackle, Snyder was left with a hole at right guard

Vying for the starting position are sophomore Kendyl Jacox, 6' 1," 285 pounds, and junior transfer from Vanderbilt Brock Stefan (6'-4," 290 pounds).

Jacox started at left guard four times during the 1994 season, debuting in the Wildcat victory against Kansas and starting against Iowa State, Oklahoma State and Nevada-Las Vegas. He can also play center as he showed last spring in the absence of Johnson.

Stefan was a part-time starter at Vanderbilt and will likely see the same situation at K-State, sharing time with Jacox. Stefan sat out the 1994 season to meet NCAA transfer regulations.

ICAT affected by ticket sellout

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

Record ticket sales might be good news for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. But students who haven't bought their tickets yet might be in for a surprise.

The athletic department announced Tuesday that it had sold out the entire general-admission student section. Both season and single-game reserved seats are still are still available. But those interested in preferred seating for members of ICAT, or I Contributed A Twenty, are probably out of luck.

"We have 6,765 general-admission seats in the student section, and ICAT is part of that section," Erick Harper, assistant athletic director, said.

Members of ICAT contribute $20 to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

In return, they receive preferred seating at football and men's basketball games and discounts with local merchants.

As of Wednesday, a record 1,667 students had joined ICAT, about 350 more than this time last year.

"We just have to stop signing up ICAT, otherwise we would have to take away seats," Harper said.

The front of the student general-admission section at football games is roped off for ICAT members.

Students who have already purchased general-admission tickets will still be able to join ICAT, but any new ticket sales would overcrowd the section.

Most ICAT members sign up during fee payment, but a few wait until later in the season.

"We may get 30 or 40 after fee payment, but the vast majority join at the beginning of the year," Harper said.

The football sellout will indirectly affect basketball sales as well. The athletic department plans to offer a $10 membership to fans still interested in joining ICAT, Harper said, but it will not be available until the football season has ended.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL CLIPBOARD

► MITCHELL RECOVERING

Carlene Mitchell, a senior point guard on the K-State women's basketball team, is recovering from knee surgery and will probably miss some early season games.

Mitchell tore her anterior cruciate ligament playing in a summer league basketball game in Topeka last July.

"It's a pretty severe injury," K-State women's basketball coach Brian Agler said. "She's doing really well — getting rave reviews from our trainers — but she's got a long road to hoe."

▶ CLUB SCENE

Live music may find home if bar owner can help it

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Club Berlin is not the club you knew when you left town for the summer.

The club hopes to become the center for live rock music in Manhattan by featuring live music once a week on a fixed night, manager Eric Shuberg said.

"It will either be on Wednesdays or Thursdays, and I'm experimenting to see which will be best," Shuberg said. "But once I decide which one, it'll be every stinking night."

The commitment to bring live rock music to Manhattan comes after the closing of Snookie's Bar. Shuberg said he sees Manhattan's glass as half full rather than half empty.

"I just see Manhattan as an untapped market," he said.

To ensure quality performances at the club, Shuberg has aligned the club with Kansas City, Mo.'s United Entertainment, an agency that matches bands and clubs to book shows.

Turquoise Sol and Jack Timberfish are performing at Berlin tonight. Truck Stop Love, which performed at Berlin on Aug. 16, will be returning in early September as well.

All of these bands have considerable followings in the Midwest, and some are known around the nation.

Shane Dolbier, United Entertainment agent who will book bands for Berlin, has personal reasons for hoping Manhattan becomes a haven of live music.

"As a KSU graduate, I spent a lot of time in Manhattan with no place you could consistently go see live entertainment," Dolbier said. "Now that Berlin is making a commitment to bring live music on a regular basis, I feel the long-overdue music scene there will have a chance."

"An actual scene — not just a club — could exist," he said.

Dolbier said that Berlin's live music will be focused, but not too narrow.

"The music at Berlin will fall under the alternative label," he said. "But that will range from soft melodic pop to ska music to heavy, noisy music your mother warned you about.

"We want to bring a variety of acts in to appeal to a wide spectrum of people," he said.

Dolbier also said his agency will be booking acts for another new feature at Berlin: male and female strippers.

"Tuesday nights will be the nights for strippers," he said. "One Tuesday a month will be for male strippers."

Berlin already has a reputation as a venue for live music as well as dance music. Shuberg is reluctant to make the club exclusively live.

"That's my whole dilemma," he said. "I enjoy the energy of the bands, but I also enjoy the energy of dance music, too."

Another change at Club Berlin is that the entrance has been moved. Instead of walking directly to the door of the club to enter, patrons now enter through the gate of the outdoor beer garden area, which leads to the club's door.

At the gate, patrons have their identification checked, have their hands stamped or marked and pay their cover charges, which Shuberg said probably won't exceed more than $4 or $5 on live nights.

Shuberg looks to the east when defining his hopes for the future of the Aggieville club he manages.

"I want Berlin to be the next Bottleneck," said Shuberg, referring to the mainstay club for live music in Lawrence. "I want Berlin to be for Manhattan what The Foundry is for Kansas City."

Media blitz planned today for Windows 95

Associated Press

SEATTLE — It took four years to create, was bitten by lots of bugs and subjected to a Justice Department investigation.

And so Microsoft Corp. wanted to make sure people knew that Windows 95 went on sale Thursday. Really, really sure.

No product has ever received the build-up given to the company's new software for running a personal computer, a device that's not even found in most homes.

Microsoft already had marketers amazed by its plans for a prime-time TV special, newspaper inserts and carnival and satellite broadcast with Jay Leno from its suburban Seattle headquarters. It even got the Rolling Stones to license the song "Start Me Up" for a TV spot.

And then Wednesday, the company revealed it would pay to light the Empire State Building in Windows 95 colors and buy out the press run of Thursday's Times of London to pass out free with a Windows 95 insert.

"I think this is unprecedented in breadth and scope," said Rick Sherlund, technology industry analyst at Goldman Sachs. "It's become a media extravaganza."

Windows 95 information also will be splashed across the Internet and on commercial on-line services, including its own Microsoft Network that goes into operation Thursday.

Microsoft said it was spending about $200 million this fiscal year on advertising, mostly for Windows 95, the on-line service and Windows 95 products. Advertising for Windows 95 products by other companies will total hundreds of millions more.

When the hype is over, buyers will be left with a program that does a lot more than the current version of Windows but is not much different from products by IBM and Apple Computer Inc.

But since Windows is the foundation program for eight out of 10 computers, the advance affects many more people. The current version of Windows has been loaded on more than 100 million PCs.

Computer makers, software writers, distributors, retailers and the people who invest in them have all been eager for Windows 95.

It has a relatively small price tag, about $100. But buyers are likely to spend several hundred dollars more to accommodate it by adding memory, upgrading their main processing chip or buying new, compatible software.

Some people may wait to buy a new computer or for applications programs, like word processors and spreadsheets, to be improved for Windows 95.

Many companies are also expected to wait and see if any problems turn up before going to the expense of converting. Analyst Sherlund notes the product has received generally favorable reviews and been widely tested.

Microsoft began working on Windows 95, then code-named Chicago, in 1991 and hoped to begin selling it in April 1994. Problems, especially in making the software compatible with thousands of existing programs and hardware devices, delayed the launch.

In recent weeks, the company's plan to include the access software for Microsoft Network with Windows 95 prompted questioning by the Justice Department's antitrust division. Competitors had complained that tactic would allow Microsoft to use its dominance in operating software to control the on-line market.

But the Justice Department said this month its investigation would not be finished in time to affect the product's launch.

And so Microsoft's marketing machine has droned on.

As Thursday broke around the world, the company staged publicity stunts in several cities. In Sydney, Australia, there was a barge holding a four-story Windows logo. In France, a special, 16-passenger "Windows compatible" automobile is loaded with computers and an infrared data link.

Events are planned Thursday in at least 40 North American cities.

The new software won't be available until November in several Asian countries, including Japan, Taiwan and Korea. The Chinese version won't go on sale until next year.

A delay until November for a version to be released in Quebec, attributed to the need for special packaging and registration cards, drew a protest from provincial leaders.

Many computer stores have been decorated with Windows 95 displays and a number, including CompUSA, Future Shop, Office Depot, Computer City, Egghead Software and Office Max, planned to open at 12:01 a.m. Thursday for people who couldn't wait until morning to buy it.

Twins joined at head separated

Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Doctors who separated 13-week-old twins born joined at their heads focused today on saving one of the infants, while the fate of her terminally ill sister remained uncertain.

In a 13 1/2-hour operation Tuesday, Michelle Tejeda was separated from her sister, Nichelle. The girls were born 13 weeks premature and shared a small portion of their brains.

Nichelle is given no chance of survival because she has a herpes infection she inherited in the womb. The disease has destroyed part or all of her intestines, stomach, bladder, kidneys, liver and brain.

THURSDAY FRIDAY SATURDAY SUNDAY

Smatterings

by Andrew S. Tomb

"Sure. Cardwell is that big building by the Union."

With the return of classes also comes the entry of several newbies to the K-State campus.

Yes, we're talking about the freshmen.

The sport of freshman-watching can be an enjoyable experience, although the season to see the 8:25 a.m. "Where is Eisenhower Hall?" scramble is just about closed.

The best thing to look for this season is the fads.

And, boy, they are a trendy bunch!

The men seem intent on entering a contest to look like that guy from Stone Temple Pilots — that is to say, tightly cropped haircuts and a wardrobe almost entirely consisting of uniforms from gas stations.

Those less alternative (read: preppies) are going the route of every other college male: ball cap, T-shirt and jean shorts or khakis.

The women are a bit more complex.

I think it's safe to say that the bodysuit craze is just about up, but there have been a few die-hards out there, hell-bent on showing off some cleavage.

Give up now. You will be assimilated.

The look seems to be skin this year, as much as you dare to show.

Belly-buttons must be shown at all times, or at least flashed on occasion, as if they were your fashionable fresh-person membership card.

Piercing seems to be big as well, along with the occasional tattoo.

I guess being unhireable in the conventional business world is a small price to pay for a few months of trendiness.

Straw poll could show Wefald as U.S. president

Despite what our ol' pals in the conventional media would like you to believe, Bob Dole's tie with Texas Sen. Phil Gramm in the Iowa straw poll means little more than a warm bucket of grasshopper spit.

The "poll" is an open vote that anyone with the time, energy and resources to drive to Ames, Iowa, and purchase a $25 ticket can participate in.

So does it seem ironic to anyone else that Dole and Gramm can convince equal amounts of their pals to make the trip to Ames?

We here at Smatterings did our own presidential straw poll, and came up with the following results:

■ Bob Dornan, Bob Dole and former Gov. Jerry Brown all tied for first place, with two votes each.

■ Receiving one vote each: Jon Wefald, Phil Gramm, Smatterer X and George McGovern.

■ One ballot cast for someone named "Joey Lawrence" (of TV's Blossom) was disqualified.

Whoa!

Dole vs. Tyson — now there's a fight to remember

Mike "Convicted Felon" Tyson and Peter "Towel-Boy" McNeeley's 89-second catastrophe last weekend will likely go down in history as the most overrated event in sports history.

Pay-per-view viewers were treated to two other fights, the life story of both McNeeley and Tyson, as well as the fight, which most people missed on the way to the refrigerator.

The cost? Around 56 cents a second.

The winner? Don King. He promotes both fighters and pockets a reported $60 million from the whole affair.

The real winner? Peter McNeely, of course. The guy was headed for a life of washing cars. At least now he has some financial security, provided he gets some sound investment advice for his $750,000.

As a service to our readers, we have compiled a short list of future fights for Tyson, chosen solely for amusement and financial value.

■ Pee-Wee Herman. Nobody knows where he is, and he probably needs the money. Tyson by KO in the first.

■ Rip Taylor. God knows Vegas is sick of him and would love to see him get bopped in the head a few times. Taylor disqualified for throwing confetti in first round.

■ Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.) "American people want me box Tyson." Fight canceled due to contender being elected president.

■ Mickey Rourke. A former boxer turned sultry actor. Might last a round. Tyson by TKO early in the second.

Boring Manhattan?

Not so. Manhattan has plenty to do, as long as you know where to go.

story ☞ Trina Holmes

What to do? What to do?

If your weekend plans (or lack thereof) are getting you down, here are a few things that can be done in Manhattan on a Friday or Saturday night that may help.

In the basement of the K-State Student Union, you can find video games, dartboards, bowling lanes and billiard tables that are available until 1 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights.

☞ The cost of a game of bowling on Friday evenings and weekends is $1.40 with a K-State student ID and $1.55 without a student ID. Bowling shoe rental runs 56 cents a pair.

☞ If pool sounds more interesting, billiard tables run $2.50 an hour per table with a K-State student ID and $3.50 an hour per table without one.

Eric Dalton, junior in nuclear engineering, said he has played pool in the Union with friends, but he doesn't frequent the basement recreation area on the weekends.

"Usually I have to work, or I'll go out to parties at fraternities or at friends' houses," Dalton said. "Sometimes I'll stay home and watch TV —HBO or something."

Renting movies is another weekend option.

Chris Kellogg, junior in microbiology and shift supervisor at Blockbuster Video, said the store sees a definite increase in business on the weekends.

"People usually come in and rent about three videos at once," Kellogg said. "College students probably make up 75 to 80 percent of our clientele."

Jared Becker, junior in English literature, said he and his friends rented movies frequently.

"We usually get new, weird stuff or old, weird classics like 'Night of the Living Dead' or 'Toxic Avenger,'" Becker said.

☞ Some places you can rent movies include Blockbuster video, 1150 Westport Drive; Dillons, 2700 Anderson and 632 Tuttle Creek Blvd.; John's Ice Cream and Video, 1123 Westloop Place; K-State Union Recreation Area; Prime Time Video, 1122 Laramie; and Rentway, 419 E. Poyntz.

Going out to a movie theater is another weekend alternative.

A number of theaters around town offer reduced prices on movie tickets.

☞ The Campus and Varsity theaters in Aggieville sell tickets for $1.50, and Union Program Council Feature Films can be viewed in the Union's Forum Hall for $1.75.

"Casper" is being shown at 7 p.m. at the Campus Theater, and "First Knight" plays at 9:10 p.m.

"Mighty Morphin Power Rangers" is being shown at 7 p.m. at the Varsity Theater, and "While You Were Sleeping" plays at 9:15 p.m.

"Circle of Friends" will play at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall and at 7 p.m. Saturday. "Much Ado About Nothing" will be playing at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. on Thursday and at 9:30 p.m. on Saturday.

If movies aren't your thing, the Wildcat Creek Sports Center will serve any volleyball, batting cage, driving range, miniature golf, video game, croquet, badminton and billiard playing cravings you could have.

☞ Showing a student or military ID will get you 25 cents off a purchase.

Sand volleyball runs $2 per hour, $5 for a half day of play and $10 for a whole day of play.

Batting cage tokens, worth 20 pitches, are $1. If you buy five tokens, you will get a sixth token free.

A small bucket of balls at the driving range costs $3.50, with a large bucket running $6.

Miniature golf games are $3.75 per game for an adult. Children 12 and under can play for $3.25, and 3- and 4-year-olds can play for $2.

☞ The center is open from 9 a.m. to midnight on Friday and Saturday, and from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. on Sunday.

Tiffany Haynes, senior in agribusiness and a clerk at the Wildcat Creek Sports Center, said she expects business at Wildcat Creek will pick up now that there are more people back in Manhattan.

"I expect more business now that school's starting," Haynes said. "Over the summer, it was kind of slow, but it's started to pick up now that people are back in town."

If you want some time alone to think or be with a friend, Bluemont Hill, Tuttle Creek and Pillsbury Crossing are good places to go.

Becker said sometimes, late on the weekend nights, he likes to go past Tuttle to Pottawatomie State Lake No. 2.

"There's a neat place to skip rocks and sit," Becker said. "When the moon's bright, everything kind of shines off the water. It's real cool.

"Sometimes I go out there to play my guitar," he said.

☞ Pillsbury Crossing is a natural ford across Deep Creek. People often drive their cars across and park in the water. Take Kansas Highway 177. Turn left on Deep Creek Road, which turns into Pillsbury Crossing Road. Turn right on Pillsbury Crossing Lane.

☞ Bluemont Hill — Follow Juliette to Ehlers to Bluemont Scenic Drive. That will take you to the top of Bluemont Hill, where there's a great view of Manhattan from the Manhattan letters.

☞ Tuttle Creek — Take Tuttle Creek Boulevard north until you see signs welcoming you to the park.

And finally, if you're in the mood to be around a lot of people, the bars in Manhattan are the place to be.

Going to the bars in Aggieville is something Loren Minnich, senior in milling science and management, said he usually does on the weekends.

"I usually go to Scoreboard because I work there," Minnich said. "If I don't go to Scoreboard, I usually go to Champions or Rowdy Trouty's."

Minnich said he doesn't mind bars where there is a live band playing, but he doesn't like having to contend with a crowded bar.

"I don't mind if there's live music at a bar, but I don't like it if there's a whole lot of people," Minnich said. "I like to sit down and not have to bump into people and fight my way to the bar."

Cover charges don't really bother Minnich, he said.

"I usually don't pay attention to them," he said. "The places I go usually don't have them, though."

Cranberries, Toad play excellent show despite bugs in gear

Aaron Brungardt
staff writer

Todd Nichols, vocalist and guitarist for Toad the Wet Sprocket, stepped up to the mike and looked out at thousands of people in Sandstone Ampitheater Tuesday night.

And he laughed.

"This song goes to all the insects flying around my head," he said, as the band began to play.

Toad, which hails from California, started things off by playing "Fly From Heaven" from its latest album, "Dulcinea."

Glen Phillips, guitarist, vocalist and mandolin player, performed a soothing new version of the heartfelt song "Windmills."

Dean Dinning, bass guitarist, keyboardist and vocalist, shook Sandstone with a wake-up call while playing the shrilling, feedback-rich song, "Stories I Tell," from Toad's previous album "Fear."

Randy Guss batted on the drums with perfection. The crowd went wild as he slapped onto the snare drums to bring the folk-like song, "Nightingale Song," to a close.

The only downfall for Toad was that it left the stage too early.

Toad has plenty of great music to offer, yet they were on stage for no longer than an hour.

They did leave on a good note, however, by playing "Fall Down," a quick-paced song about being sick of it all. The crowd was left begging for more, yet content with what they had heard.

A pack of roadies scurried onto the stage, resetting, unplugging and unpacking equipment for the headlining band.

Twenty minutes later, Dolores O'Riordan, vocalist for the Cranberries, crept up from backstage while guitarists Neil and Mike Hogan belted out the rhythm to "You're So Pretty." Drummer Feargal Lawler provided the beat.

Lawler keeps improving his technique with each album.

From the first Cranberries LP, "Everybody Else Is Doing It, So Why Can't We?" to the latest album, "No Need To Argue," his abilities have blossomed.

But the talent he exhibited Tuesday night far surpasses any previous studio performance.

O'Riordan waltzed in front of the audience with her red-dyed hair in a long, pink satin dress.

She didn't stop there. She had to show off her red shoes to fit in with the "Wizard of Oz" jokes that the crowd constantly had to tolerate.

She gracefully danced across the stage like a child in a playground, contrasting sharply with her bandmates, who preferred to stay in one place.

Guitarists Neil and Mike Hogan matched O'Riordan's voice with sonic genius, blending smoothly like a well-made amaretto capuccino.

With the coming of the night and the bright surge of the stage lights, thousands of insects mustered an attack, forcing O'Riordan to douse herself with "Off."

The relentless bugs soon overtook the band's instruments, getting caught in guitar strings.

O'Riordan wrestled control from the insect army, flailing her fingertips onto the strings of her guitar to fling the pests away from their assault.

This produced an interesting, if unintentional, guitar solo. The audience cheered wildly. O'Riordan accepted the humor of the situation

"Thank you," she cried out to the crowd.

No doubt, this concert produced some new fans, and made some who were already fans strong believers in the never ending stock of great, mellow music that characterizes the Cranberries and Toad the Wet Sprocket.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Commission as an assistant administrator, where he worked for 15 years.

"My job, where I have been for 15 years, has meant working with many people on a variety of projects. The position at the college is varied to an even greater degree, which is what I like," Graham said.

Under Graham's leadership at the Kansas Wheat Commission, the number of research projects conducted by the commission grew from three to 15 each year and the budget increased to more than $2 million annually.

Graham's chief duties at K-State will be communicating with outside sources and understanding what kind of research and education needs they have and bring that back to campus, so we can be responsive, Johnson said. Graham will also represent Johnson at clientele meetings and events.

"Steven is very outgoing and successful at drawing lots of resources to issues," Johnson said.

Investigating new and improved funding methods is also important to agriculture, Graham said.

"We will be forming alliances and working on funding projects jointly with other groups," Graham said.

"I will be working with the university lobbyist, helping alumni and agribusiness groups as well as maintaining a two-way flow of information," Graham said.

Graham will also establish schedules for off-campus visitors and coordinate activities of the Agricultural Advancement Club.

"As assistant to the dean of agriculture, he will have some specialized functions, and very few have to deal with the academic programs. Mostly, he will represent and assist the dean," Larry Erpelding, associate director of agricultural academic programs, said.

Almost 20 years ago, Graham's parents advised him not to pursue a future in farming.

"I grew up on a farm and had calves and hogs and was in 4-H, but my parents said not to go into farming. They wanted me to get a business degree," Graham said.

He is preparing to begin his newly appointed job on Sept. 18.

FARM

Growers who have base but have not participated in at least three out of the last five years would not be eligible.

The bill would meet decreasing budget demands and get the government out of farm program management.

Growers participating in government farm programs would have an unprecedented flexibility in the choice of crops they grow.

"No longer would farmers be forced to grow an unprofitable crop. This is as close as we have been to a market in 50 years," Art Barnaby, professor of agriculture economics, said.

The minimum deficiency payment is based on a five-month national average price plus 10 cents for wheat and 7 cents for corn and grain sorghum.

"A major change for Kansas farmers is they won't have downside price protection, but they will have the ability to grow other crops," Barnaby said.

This policy shifts all the yield and price risk to the growers. Growers will have to learn new tools for managing risk if they want to survive.

"Ways farmers can protect themselves is to keep their cost structures and debt as low as possible and look at ways they can diversify their income streams," Brownback said.

Other risk management choices for managing downside price and yield risk are self insurance for price and yield risk, forward contracts, puts, synthetic puts, minimum price contract, basis contracts, hedges, hedge to arrive, yield futures, MPCI crop insurance and revenue insurance.

Actual dollar amounts have not been set at this time because budget cuts have not been finalized and the number of growers participating will be a factor.

The bill will be considered in Congress sometime after the session resumes in early September.

SUBWAY

to walk off campus to get a franchise-quality food," Edwards said.

Subway provides a fast and convenient place to get food, Eric Lewis, junior in bakery science, said.

"I like having Subway in the Union because I don't have time to go home for lunch, and it's a change from the food provided by the Union," Lewis said.

"I also like the sauce they put on their meatballs," he said.

Nick Colby, Subway manager in training, has also worked in other stores in Manhattan and enjoys serving people who are primarily students, he said.

"Not only are we a lot busier here on campus, but since we serve mostly students, it's a lot more fun," said Colby. "Students go with the flow and don't put up as much of a hassle."

Subway not only provides a food service to students, it also hires students.

"I really try to hire students," Edwards said. "I especially try to work around their schedules to make everything easier for both myself and them."

But Subway isn't the only place that serves food in the Union.

The Union Stateroom also provides food services, and it experienced a drop in sales during the 1995 spring semester after Subway moved into the Union, Malley Sisson, Food Service Director, said.

"I think that it's a great opportunity for the students to have a nationally branded food service in the Union," Sisson said. "I can't say for sure if it is because of Subway, but since they came to the Union, the poundage sold from our deli bar dropped about half."

Bringing a vender like Subway into the Union was positive, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said.

Because of the success that both Subway and the Union have experienced, there is the possibility of bringing in more vendors with the future Union renovation, he said.

"Although nothing is for sure, the possibility of bringing in more vendors is something we will continue to consider," Sills said. "If that should happen, the vendors will either be operated by the franchises themselves or by us."

Teen travels 2,000 miles after hitching ride

Associated Press

HERMISTON, Ore. — Mike Wright just wanted a quick ride into town for some candy and soda when he jumped a train near his home in western Kentucky. He ended up traveling 2,000 miles.

A couple of railroad workers who heard Wright's calls for help freed the Kentucky teenager from an insulated produce car on Monday — a week after he first entered it.

"He wasn't walking too straight, but he had a big smile on his face," crew hauler Jackie Dunlap said.

Wright, 17, told his rescuers he had jumped aboard a train Aug. 14 as a quick way into the small town of Crofton, Ky. But the train did not stop until it reached Evansville, Ind., 65 miles to the north.

He switched trains and, believing he was on his way back home, fell asleep. He awoke to find that someone had closed and latched the car door.

A week later, Dunlap and yard switchman Les Stuplich parked their truck beside the boxcar as they prepared to separate some boxcars. That's when they heard Wright calling for help and freed him.

Stuplich said Wright looked terrible but was fine except for being dehydrated and hungry.

"He said, 'I've run away from home a couple of times, but I didn't mean to this time,'" Dunlap said.

Wright, who was wearing tennis shoes, shorts and a T-shirt, was treated at a hospital and was waiting today for a trip home to be arranged.

Wright's family didn't want him to talk to reporters, but he issued a statement through the state child welfare officials who were taking care of him. In it, he said: "Kids don't need to jump on boxcars. It can be deadly. I came out lucky. I want kids to know not to do this."

John Bromley, a Union Pacific Railroad spokesman in Omaha, Neb., said the refrigeration unit on the insulated car was turned off because it was presumed empty, but the insulation kept it cool enough for Wright to survive.

seems destroyed midway through his second term. Four potentially strong Democrats are interested in his congressional seat, including the 30-year-old son of civil rights leader Jesse Jackson.

Political leaders are not rallying to the side of Jesse Jackson Jr. but Frank Watkins, his father's longtime political mentor, already has signed up as co-campaign manager.

Reynolds has said he is so far in debt he expects to lose the suburban home he and his wife, Marisol, bought last year.

Evidence at the sex trial showed the couple made the $26,000 down payment with $11,000 from their savings account and a $15,000 check written on an account controlled by Mrs. Reynolds. That account is under review in the federal investigation of Reynolds' finances.

Cook County Judge Fred Suria set a Sept. 12 hearing date for post-trial motions but set no sentencing date for Reynolds. He remains free on a personal recognizance bond.

aside by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

"We had a plan to move the road so that it would go over the hill. That would have cost $1.5 million, but we found that it would be cheaper to keep the road where it is," Harden said.

"Right now, we're looking at around $250,000 to $500,000."

Harden said he hopes construction on the road will begin in spring 1996.

However, he said there are several things that could delay the process.

"The Corps of Engineers is looking at a levee on the river, which was also damaged in the 1993 floods," Harden said. "Since the money comes from the same fund, construction could be delayed. It could be the 1997 season before it gets repaired."

Until the road is repaired, traffic will continue to use a gravel crossing that was built in May.

"There is a fair amount of traffic use again on the road," Harden said. "It is now back to where it was before the problem."

Courtesy phones to be installed

Becky Klenklen
staff reporter

K-State Telecommunications will install 16 courtesy telephones to help improve student safety next week.

The newly purchased courtesy telephones will be placed in 15 academic halls on campus. Calls made from the phones will not have time limits on them and must be local calls only.

"If the system gets abused, we will change them to a campus-only phone system because their main purpose is for the Wildcat Walk," Christie Spicer, junior in speech pathology and phone committee chairman, said.

DARREN WHITLEY
Collegian

These newly purchased telephones are primarily for safety as well as courtesy. Their intended purpose is to call campus police and the Wildcat Walk escort service.

Wildcat Walk volunteers will escort students on campus and up to one block off campus.

"I think that the Wildcat escort service will be used more often now because of the increased accessibility to the phones," Eric Keen, a Wildcat Walk student organizer, said.

The telephones were purchased for $460 each, and two spares are on order. A total of $8,280 was paid by the telecommunications office in support of the Wildcat Walk.

The phones arrived this week.

"I cannot see how it would not increase the safety on campus because the students will not have to leave the building late at night," Capt. Charles Beckom of K-State Police said.

The telephones were necessary because students were concerned about being on campus with limited resources in an emergency, Beckom said.

A DIFFERENT TYPE OF FRESHMAN YEAR

BY NIKOLA ZYTKOW

The recently crowned Miss Teen USA sits Indian style and barefoot atop her carelessly-made bed looking almost like any other college student.

Even though 18-year-old Keylee Sanders said she knows that she cannot escape the public eye, she said she still wants to lead as normal a college life as possible.

Her room in Van Zile Hall, with its barely visible carpet and all the appliances a person would ever need, all but screams a typical college lifestyle and puts her well on her way to joining the ranks of college freshman everywhere.

But the thousands of cards and roses she still receives quickly remind her that she is a bit of a celebrity, not only in her hometown of Louisberg, but all over the country.

Sanders is the first-ever Kansas contestant to bring home the title of Miss Teen USA.

"I think Americans and people around the world are very into looks, fashion and beauty, and that's what it is. It's a parade of beauty and fashion," Sanders said.

To Sanders, who from the earliest age said she remembers being a girlie type of girl — fashion and style have come almost second nature. It is no wonder she's majoring in fashion merchandising and mass communications.

"When I was little, I always wanted my hair curled and makeup done. I've always loved watching pageants," Sanders said. "I never wore sweats to school. I never went to school without makeup. I don't even think I own a pair of sweats."

At the age of 12, Sanders wanted to be a model, she said.

"I pretty much forced my mom to let me do it. I made all the phone calls (to modeling agencies) myself at 12 years old," she said.

It was her modeling agent at John Casablancas who got her involved in her first beauty pageant, where she won the title of Miss Lawrence. Her next step was the Miss Kansas Teen and then the long-awaited Miss Teen USA crowning.

"It was very important just because I wanted it," Sanders said. "I don't think pageants are the end-all to everything. Of course not everybody is going to be into them. But I really wanted it, and I think it will open a lot of doors for me."

Doors are all but flinging open for Sanders, who is scheduled to do a photo shoot with "Seventeen" magazine in the next couple of weeks. During the next year of her commitment, she said she also expects to be a leader in a youth conference in Washington, D.C., and work with the Southwest AIDS Foundation doing fundraisers.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Keylee Sanders, freshman in fashion merchandising and journalism and mass communications, was crowned the new Miss Teen USA Aug. 15 in Wichita. Sanders, who is from Louisberg, began her studies at K-State this fall.

AIDS awareness education in high school is a topic Sanders said she has always stood behind.

"I wear an AIDS ribbon pin on my sash at all times," Sanders said.

She said that because she wears the pin, she is sure that sometime in her question-and-answer sessions during a pageant she will receive a sex-related question.

When Sanders was asked at the pageant what she thought about condom distribution in schools, she said that even though it may not be the appropriate place for it, no one should be ashamed to be safe and that condoms should be readily available to everyone.

Her serious expression transforms into a smile like a kid in a candy store when Sanders talks about all the prizes she has received.

Her winnings include $90,000 in cash, $12,000 in gift certificates from Flemington Fur Company of New Jersey, $7,500 in gift certificates from Payless Shoe Store and plenty of other bonuses. Oh, and the Hawaiian tropic trip for two can't hurt, either.

"A fur coat, going to Hawaii, that's stuff that I want to do. Except now I don't have to spend my money on it because they give it to me," Sanders said.

With school already paid for by her parents, Sanders said she plans to save most of the $90,000, she said.

The prizes and positive attention are a definite advantage to winning the crown, but Sanders said she is not sure whether she wants to do any more pageants.

After all, Miss Teen and Miss USA are in two separate divisions, and if Sanders wants to compete for Miss USA, she will have to win the Miss Kansas pageant and then go onto Miss USA.

"I don't know if I can handle another pageant, because it was just so much stress and so tiring," Sanders said. "When it got down to the top three, I just thought I was going to pass out.

Glickman to be Landon Lecturer

Kimberly Hefling
staff reporter

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman will be K-State's 102nd Landon Lecturer.

Glickman, who also served for 18 years as Kansas' 4th District Representative in Congress, will present the first Landon Lecture for fall 1995 at 10:30 a.m. Sept. 8 in McCain Auditorium.

"We are very pleased Secretary Glickman has accepted our invitation," Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture series, said. "Agriculture is the state's principal industry and one of the strengths of Kansas State University."

Before becoming secretary in March, Glickman worked on Congressional farm bills in 1977, 1981, 1985 and 1990. These bills concerned issues such as expanding trade in agriculture goods and food safety.

As secretary of agriculture, Glickman is head of one of the largest agencies in the federal government. It is responsible for managing traditional farm programs and deals with domestic food assistance, research and education, agricultural marketing, meat and poultry inspection.

Closed classes cause a fury of activity at the enrollment center and teacher and student frustration the first week of classes.

Douglas Benson, associate professor of Spanish, said his department has had problems because there are not enough spaces for all the students who want into classes.

"There are not enough spaces for everyone, so students circle the classes like vultures waiting for someone to die so they can get in," he said.

Most of the Spanish sections were full before freshman enrollment began, he said. The Spanish department raised its cap of 25 students to 33 students per class to allow additional students into Spanish IV.

Benson said this puts a strain on teachers.

"Learning a language is like learning the violin or learning a sport. They have to do it to learn it," he said. "The more students who are in a class, the less time a teacher can spend with students and the less time we have for activities."

Senate appoints committee chair

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

The Student Affairs and Social Services Committee changed its chairman at the first Student Senate meeting Thursday night.

Chuck Haynes, former business senator and SASS chair, resigned his position to take an accounting job. Haynes is also enrolled in graduate school.

"A lady opening an accounting firm offered me a job," Haynes said.

He said he wanted to diversify his experience before he entered the work force full time, so he could not refuse the offer.

"It's a real sad time for me," Haynes said.

Although Haynes is sorry to be stepping down, he said he is confident the newly appointed chairman, Janelle Moore, will do a good job. Moore was elected as an arts and sciences senator in April.

"I think Janelle is going to do great," Haynes said. "If she wants help, I'm going to help get the committee going."

Kayla Dick was also newly appointed to the 1995-96 cabinet as the Living Organizations coordinator to fill the vacancy left when the former coordinator Jenni Cheatham was appointed as chief of staff.

Moore, Dick and the 11 other cabinet member appointments were approved.

Senate standing rules were also approved. Standing rules govern the procedures senators must follow in conducting business not covered in Robert's Rules of Order.

The 1995-96 standing rules require roll-call votes on legislation concerning allocations, fees or final action.

HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST AVOIDS CHINESE PRISON, SENT BACK TO U.S.

BEIJING — Chinese-American human rights activist Harry Wu, detained two months ago for spy charges, was on his way home Thursday, expelled from China just hours after he was sentenced to a 15-year term.

His speedy expulsion removes a major obstacle to improving relations with the United States, which have sunk to their lowest level since diplomatic ties were established in 1979.

It also raises Beijing's international profile as it prepares to be host to a United Nations conference on women that is expected to draw nearly 40,000 delegates from around the world.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Robert Laing said Wu left Shanghai on a Chinese airliner bound for San Francisco, where he was expected to arrive Thursday evening.

His sudden release took his wife, Ching-Lee Wu, by surprise.

"I am too happy to really tell my feelings," she said, smiling as she spoke briefly to reporters on the front lawn of their home in Milpitas, Calif., near San Francisco.

Wu spent 19 years in Chinese labor camps before emigrating to the United States in 1985. In 1991, he made four trips to China to research, document and film abuses in China's reform-through-labor system.

REFUGEES RETURN TO ZAIRE

GOMA, Zaire — Zairian troops stopped forcing refugees from Rwanda and Burundi to go back to their turbulent homelands Thursday.

Reassured, thousands emerged from hiding and returned to their refugee camp homes of sticks and plastic sheeting.

It was unclear what motivated Zaire to stop the evictions or how long the suspension would last. But the halt and return of the refugees, who had bolted from the camps this week with scant food or water, eased fears of a new humanitarian crisis.

By Thursday, some 173,000 fled into the countryside to escape the soldiers carrying out an expulsion order.

FRESH CHICKEN ISN'T SO FRESH

WASHINGTON — If a packaged chicken is frozen solid, it's not fresh, the Agriculture Department has decided.

But don't call it frozen, either. Such a bird probably will be labeled hard chilled under a new rule.

The rule is intended to clear up confusion in supermarket aisles by prohibiting fresh labels on frozen birds.

It takes effect in a year.

Poultry that has been chilled to as low as 0 degrees Fahrenheit — frozen stiff — can be sold as fresh.

Under the new rule, birds can be called fresh only if they have never been chilled below 26 degrees, the temperature at which chickens freeze.

DISNEYLAND REVOKES PASS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The third time Katrina Laurent was stopped for driving too fast, she lost her Disneyland pass. Estimated speed: 4.5 mph.

Laurent, a 35-year-old who uses a wheelchair because of cerebral palsy, admitted she drove the battery-powered chair faster than usual Saturday.

She had an excuse. She wanted to get across Disneyland's Main Street to the Pocahontas show before a parade blocked her way.

Another customer complained about being bumped by her wheelchair. Laurent denied bumping anyone, but Disney revoked her $199 annual pass for at least a month.

"I'm extremely sad about it," said Laurent, who visits the park almost every day. For the past four years, Laurent said, she has saved for the pass fromf her $500 monthly Social Security payments.

It was the third time Laurent had been cited for speeding, a park spokesman said.

BRIDGE DEATH OUTRAGES WORLD

DETROIT — Just when Detroit was shedding its Murder City image, Deletha Word was beaten in public and plunged off a bridge to her death.

The crime has once again forced Detroit to confront its reputation as one of the nation's most dangerous, callous cities.

"It's a wake-up call for all of us," said the Rev. Jim Holley, pastor of Detroit's Little Rock Baptist Church. "We have to take our streets back ... but it just makes it difficult to keep hope alive."

Word's death Saturday has dominated Detroit news coverage this week and prompted some people to vent their anger on talk radio. The district attorney's office has also gotten calls — from across the country and as far away as Australia and Germany.

Police sources had said that a crowd of 40 watched the attack on the Belle Isle bridge and that some cheered while nobody stepped in. Police denied those reports, but what happened on the bridge remains unclear.

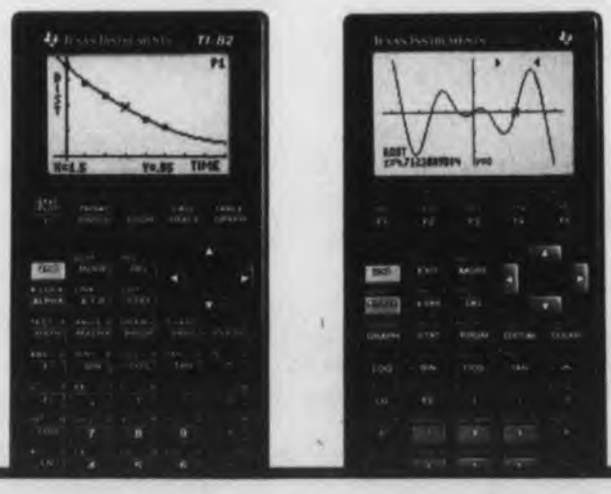
Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?



More and me, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

DB92 to welcome back campus

Karrin Thomas
staff writer

Five hours of free, live music.

Promotional CD and poster giveaways.

And the opportunity to watch people garbed in medieval attire beating the crap out of each other.

K-State students will be given a warm welcome back by KSDB-FM 91.9 this weekend, when DB92 is host to the Welcome Back Concert '95 from 2 to 7 p.m. Sunday at Manhattan City Park.

The concert is free and will be at the Arts-in-the-Park stage on the east side of City Park.

DB92's second-annual Welcome Back concert offers a five-band lineup, poster and CD giveaways, and a sword-fighting exhibition by members of the Society for Creative Anachronism Inc.

Seven, a jazz and funk outfit from Manhattan, will start the festivities, followed by Ten Thumb, Action Man and Sufferbus.

Iowa-native House Of Large Sizes will be headlining the show. The band has been touring the country for seven years and has released three albums. It is well-known for live performances.

"House Of Large Sizes is one of the best and most energetic live acts touring today," Eric Melin, music director for DB92, said.

Local bands will also have the opportunity to perform at the show.

Marty Robertson, guitarist for Manhattan's Ten Thumb, described his band's sound as loud and heavy, but not fast, with odd meters and a creative approach to doing things.

Action Man, a band from Lawrence, has a more midwestern-influenced pop sound, while Sufferbus is described by Melin as guitar-driven power pop.

"I went to see last year's show, and I'm really looking forward to participating this year," Sufferbus bassist Brian Harris said.

The band has just released a seven-inch single on a New York-based label, Brave New Records.

Kate McCulloh, junior in biology, was one student who attended last year's show.

"It was a really nice, relaxed atmosphere, and everyone was having a good time doing their own thing," she said.

Last year's show attracted about 800 people, and this year's concert is hoped to bring at least as many, Melin said.

"The Welcome Back Concert is a great way to introduce people to the local music scene and at the same time see a national touring act," Melin said. "The more support we get for shows like this, the more likely it is that we will get more bands to play here in Manhattan."

Women's voting patterns have changed

Claudette Riley
staff writer

The 19th amendment to the U.S. constitution 75 years ago was the earliest ground accomplished for women voters, Sue Zschoche, assistant professor of history, said.

"The first call for women to vote came in 1848, and that original impetus grew out of women's involvement in reform groups," Zschoche said. "Women needed the tools of citizenship so that they could perform their role in society, one considered a sort of moral guardian."

Instead of redirecting areas of reform, women tended to vote as their husbands voted instead of as a block, Zschoche said.

Today, women are more concerned with social-reform issues and quality-of-life issues, she said.

"Until very recently, women tended to vote with the men of their social class," Zschoche said. "There is a recent study which proposes that there is now a permanent gender gap in politics. Essentially, it says that what is important to men is not what is necessarily important to women."

> "We just need to have more women involved in making decisions."
> LORI ROBINSON, SOPHOMORE IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

Men and women think about issues differently, Lori Robinson, sophomore in elementary education, said.

"I think women get the more personal issues, when men tend to be more political. There's an equality there, though women can think politically too," Robinson said.

Gretchen Schulteis, junior in anthropology, said she also believes gender plays a role in voting.

"Some women might be more concerned about issues such as abortion because it affects them on such a personal level," she said. "Though things are changing, I think women have paid more attention to education issues out of concern for their children."

Registering to vote was a project in her high-school government class, Schulteis said.

Since then she said she follows issues and pays closer attention to the elections which directly pertain to her.

"I'm more concerned with local issues. I know the overall government pertains to me and that's important, but it's the local things that affect me directly and matter the most," Schulteis said.

Women are also oriented to specific issues, Robinson said.

"My biggest issue is sexual harassment, maybe because it affects me more than, say, it would affect my husband. It's important to me because I know people it has happened to, and there's a personal connection," Robinson said.

As a married woman, Robinson said she discusses the issues with her husband but independently decides where her votes will be cast.

"Me and my husband discuss the issues, but I wouldn't say one of us has more influence over the other one," she said.

"We just need to have more women involved in making decisions. There aren't enough, but women have their own minds and need to be able to speak what they think."

New phones offer greater security for students

What people want, and the original idea behind the project, is not to call the police but to allow people to go home safely.

K-State Telecommunications will install 16 new phones on campus next week.

When the plan was originally proposed, the phones were not going to be capable of dialing off campus. Wednesday, Telecommunications decided to allow the phones to dial off campus.

It's a good idea.

It seems a simple thing to be able to call off campus.

People involved with the project have said they are concerned that students will abuse the system. The intent, they said, was to allow people to call the police and the Wildcat Walk office.

What people want, and the original idea behind the project, is not to call the police but to allow people to go home safely.

Allowing people to call home may ease any burden the new system may encounter. It will let people feel safe.

The speaker-phones will be placed all over campus for students to use.

Telecommunications was wise to get phones that would be awkward for long conversations.

Nobody wants to talk about the intimate details of their life on a speaker phone.

Hopefully, the phones will have the escort service numbers posted next to them, like many of the phones already around campus.

Students should take advantage of the service but not abuse it. Consider the phones as a safety line that can ensure an escort or a ride home.

If you are interested in becoming an escourt for the Wildcat Walk, please contact 395-SAVE or 532-SAVE. There are also applications at the front desk of each residence hall.

Columnist sympathizes with GTAs

I was going to puke.

It wasn't nerves, I thought, staring out at the sea of faces in my first Public Speaking I class. What did I have to be nervous about? It's not like I had ever taught before and those students had been much more likely to spit bullets than the ones in front of me.

And I'd had public speaking. True, most of my memories were hazy and mainly involved showing up for class, dressed in pink, footed pajamas and a fuzzy green bathrobe, lugging a coffee machine.

But I knew what I was doing and what I was talking about. Somehow that knowledge didn't have much of an effect on the fear rolling around in the pit of my stomach like a congealed ball of bacon grease.

My class watched me watch them with a blank and detached air of complete disinvolvement. I could almost feel the office hours I'd be spending alone, waiting for someone to come by with a question or a friendly hello.

I thought about all I'd learned over the past week in training. My adviser had said my students were probably just as nervous as I was. They didn't look nervous. They looked bored.

Thinking about the other graduate teaching assistants in the department was comforting. I didn't pass out. I didn't even throw up. I opened my mouth, and I taught. Some of the students even nodded once or twice. I liked that.

Later, I managed to laugh with some of the other GTAs as they told me how nervous they'd been their first class.

COLUMN

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

I could only imagine what it would have been like for me if I hadn't had the training I'd had or met the people I'd met.

I could only imagine how scared, stressed and inept I would have been if I hadn't known so much about what I was doing.

It reminded me of a question I had been asked recently about how I felt about graduate students at this university unionizing.

I hadn't stated an opinion. I'd heard all the arguments about more money and the amount of work we were responsible for. I'd heard about the conditions under which some GTAs have to teach and how unionizing could help relieve the burden many of them feel.

But I kept feeling like there was something missing. I realized what that something was when I stood in front of my class for the first time: the sense of needing some form of solidarity.

The unionization of GTAs isn't just about money and hours. It isn't just about having a university-wide organization able to address grievances to the administration that desperately need to be addressed.

It's a chance for GTAs to band together, regardless of their department and interests. It's about organizing a forum, a consensus, in which we can address each other. Perhaps to become mentors for one another or different insights into problems which arise in different departments.

But unionizing is not about being a social club. We want our chance to have a say in expanding ideas and issues that are important to us and, therefore, to the students we teach.

I feel like I received an excellent training in preparation for teaching. In a way, I wish it would have been longer, but at least I established some kind of contact with other GTAs.

I feel like I have someone I can go to if I have a problem. However, there are some on campus who might not have that sense of security.

Having a union might provide a sense of security and a sense of community so we all could express the pressures we are undergoing are not singular to our experience.

There are those who say graduate students should consider ourselves lucky for having the privilege of being allowed to teach while still being students.

No one knows more than we do the privileges we have and how grateful we are for the opportunities we have been given.

But, the margin for error under which we operate is almost non-existent. The pressure is extremely intense. And if we fail, either as students or as teachers, we take with us more than just ourselves. We may take others with us.

A union isn't only about money. It's about community. We need that. We want it. We deserve it.

▶ GAY ENEMIES

Dear editor,

Some Republican presidential candidates here in Iowa are making a lot of noise about the need to "protect the family," a worthy goal.

But to get in good with Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition, they seem willing to go along with the lie that gay people are somehow a threat to the family.

Using gays as the scapegoat for the demise of the family is reprehensible nonsense.

With a 50-percent divorce rate, adultery, teenage pregnancy, abused women, financial conditions which require both parents to work and leave children home alone, abandoned and abused children, and so forth, it doesn't take much effort to see that heterosexuals have succeeded quite well in crippling the family without any help from gays and lesbians.

I understand why opportunist politicians love the word "family." Every listener can hear what he or she wishes.

On the surface, it's a claim to be defending tradition, but underneath it's a code word for a deeply anti-feminist and homophobic message, with a strong tinge of racism.

Demagogues find it useful because it marshals those who understand these implied meanings while appearing blandly benign to those who do not.

It is ironic that several of the leading candidates for president have themselves benefited from liberalized attitudes about domestic arrangements.

Not long ago, being divorced meant the end of a candidate's presidential ambitions. Now, the divorced include Bob Dole, Phil Gramm and Pete Wilson.

Meanwhile, the leader of social conservatives in Congress, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, is himself divorced and has a lesbian sister.

Gay people are not anti-family. We are your family. Most of us are very loyal family members. For the most part, we support our biological families and our chosen families, and we take care of our elderly parents, as well as or better than a large number of heterosexuals.

Instructor defends new sit-in policy

I would like to address the concerns raised by the Collegian staff and Terri Shump in Wednesday's Opinion page regarding sitting in on English expository writing classes.

It seems to me that a great many people simply don't understand what happens every year in the English department — perhaps a little explaining will help cool tempers and even promote some understanding.

The bottom line is this: Expository writing instructors cannot sign permission slips to allow anyone into their classes. This policy makes sense if you think about it: These classes are capped at 22 for many excellent reasons. With drop/add enrolling students (the paperwork generally takes a day or two to reach the instructor) and instructors writing permission slips at the same time, the whole thing would simply become a mess. Classes would become overloaded, and it would become impossible to teach or to learn.

Instructors can, however, drop those inconsiderate souls who enrolled for the class and never bothered to show up (after a week). There are some very good reasons for this policy, and I'm sure Irene Ward would be happy to explain them.

As a former expository writing instructor, I can say that the constant uproar of students coming and going during that first week of class is particularly difficult in classes like Expos I and II. In lecture or lab classes, a student can come and go without disturbing a class very much. Not so in our expos classes. These classes depend on inter-student relationships, group work and a unique sort of dialogue with the teacher.

Although these teachers may not assign any papers or major homework during that first week, they do work toward creating a classroom where students (hopefully) feel comfortable workshopping papers and learning in groups.

It is very difficult to establish this type of class attitude with people enrolling as late as two weeks after the semester has started, and with others simply disappearing. Students who sit in are very likely to disappear within a week. Students who enroll are likely to disappear because the chances of getting into the class which has been sat in on are rather slim.

GUEST COLUMN

STACY PETERMAN

Granted, some expos classes use the same textbook, and most teach approximately the same papers, but there will be sometimes significant, and difficult to overcome, differences between the classes.

I also have to wonder if the students who are already enrolled are really getting cheated. For instance, the fact that no major assignments are given in the first week and a half does not mean that students learn nothing during this time. It simply means that students entering the class after a day or two can be brought up to speed without much fuss.

Also, I can't help but point out that the students who are enrolled in expos classes are also students who pre-enrolled. I know, in some cases, it is impossible to pre-enroll, but by the time a student has passed out of his freshman year he should know that classes are in danger of closing early. That student should know to pre-enroll. Why should students who thought ahead be frustrated by the swarm of unenrolled students who come to class and pick up their course policy statements and take more of the teacher's time?

And for those students skipping because there aren't any major assignments in the first week and a half — they are only cheating themselves.

I would also like to point out that students who are not enrolled in an expos class did not, after all, pay tuition for that class. The facts are that we live in a pay-by-the-credit-hour world.

Paying tuition does not grant a student the right to walk into any class on campus. Instructors are paid to teach their students, the college pays the instructors, and the students pay the college. If students want to learn even though they don't get credit, it's called auditing, and it generally costs more than tuition.

To the above problems add budget cuts, not just this year but for several years in a row, and the fact that Expos I and II have been, until this year, two of the very few required courses at K-State, and you have two more reasons for the present mess. We don't like it either — what's going on in the classroom is simply an attempt to minimize problems.

Professor Ward and Dean Feyerharm are not evil monsters who plot against the student body — I know, I've seen them, and neither one has fangs.

In fact, both should be commended — Ward for the amazing feat of coordinating approximately 40 teacher schedules with expos slots, and Feyerharm with his work to help keep at-risk students in school. Too many colleges don't try nearly so hard and don't care when students simply fall through the cracks.

I've been on both sides, and not so long ago I was a student who was willing to threaten enrollment staff to get required courses. I also taught Expos I and II. The rush of students trying to enroll at the beginning of the semester is frustrating for all involved.

The only way into an expository writing class is through drop/add. If you don't like drop/add, keep in mind that the English department can't do anything about that.

If you get into a class, the instructor will be happy to bring you up to speed. In the meantime, try to understand that there are reasons for things to be as they are — perhaps some of you could spend that week and a half calling your money-possessing authority figure of choice and telling them you'd like K-State to have more expository writing instructors.

Brownback: Americans against big federal government

Heather Stephany
staff reporter

Americans are upset with big federal government and want advancements made in reducing the federal debt and in reforming social programs, Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said.

Brownback, who spoke to about 50 students in a Kansas politics class Wednesday, was elected to Congress last year. It is the first elected office he has had since serving as the K-State student body president during the 1978-79 school year.

Brownback talked with students about changes in Congress and spent the majority of the time fielding students' questions and discussing their concerns.

People are angry about the big government, Brownback said. He cited the $5-trillion federal debt and the $150-billion trade imbalance for this year as examples of problems.

"There are three ways out of debt. We can increase taxes, cut spending or inflate our way out of it," Brownback said.

"The most insidious, cruelest way to handle the debt is by inflating our way out of it," he said. "It makes your earnings worth less."

Brownback said if the budget is not cut, inflation is the only way to get out of the debt. He said the government needs to cut back on programs and get out of other areas.

Brownback referred to the 10th Amendment to the Constitution when discussing the welfare program, which says all powers not given to the federal government will go to the states.

"To me, the answer is to let the states experiment with welfare. The federal government has tried to renovate the welfare system eight times. Welfare needs to get out of Washington and back to the states," Brownback said.

Brownback

"If it were up to me, welfare would not go just to the state but on down to local governments who can be more subjective," he said.

Brownback compared his idea on welfare to the total quality-management concept, which states the person on the line and closest to the situation knows the best way to handle problems.

For example, if the local government felt the welfare program was not efficient and needed adjustments, it would be in the position to make those changes as needed without consulting the state or federal government.

"This is a big transition period. There are revolutionary changes occurring right now rather than the usual evolutionary changes," Brownback said.

"Evolutionary changes usually occur in Congress, which are slower, but right now revolutionary faster changes are happening," Brownback said.

"People want change, and they want it now," Brownback said.

One event demonstrating America's desire for significant change in the federal government occurred in the fall 1992, when voters elected 72 new Republican members of Congress, allowing the Republicans to possess the majority for the first time in 40 years, he said.

The negative image of the federal government had by many Americans might be partially responsible for this greater emphasis on change, Brownback said.

"The biggest thing in American politics right now is that no one trusts either party. In a recent poll conducted by Republicans and Democrats, results showed that three-fourths of the American people distrust our government," he said.

"1996 is going to be a huge election year. I encourage you to get involved. The '96 cycle will have a big impact on you. It is part of your future — a big part of it," Brownback said.

John Potter, Student Senate chair and junior in political science, said he was encouraged by Brownback's stress on student involvement and the time he took out of his schedule to visit with college students.

"It was good to see Rep. Brownback looking forward to the future. College students can do the footwork on campus, and everyone can get involved," Potter said.

Paul Runyan, senior in political science, said Brownback was good at pointing out problems, but there was little discussion on solving problems.

Carey Sterrett, sophomore in biology, said she agreed.

"I was impressed Rep. Brownback came to speak to a lower-level political science class. He seemed to tiptoe around some issues, though, saying what he thought we wanted to hear," Sterrett said.

Search begins for new UPC director; acting director appointed

Cristina Janney
city/government editor

It will probably be a year before Union Program Council has a new permanent director.

The delay in hiring a new program director was the result of the search for a new K-State Student Union director this summer.

Patrick Carney, UPC president, said the program director search was delayed so the new Union director could oversee the search.

UPC

▶ Union Program Council has 10 committees for which students can volunteer: Arts, Eclectic Entertainment, Issues and Ideas, Special Events, Travel, Feature and Kaleidoscope films, Multicultural, Outdoor Recreation, and Promotions. Contact the UPC office at 532-6571.

Bernard Pitts from Iowa State University was hired last week to fill the Union director position and will be coming to campus at the beginning of October.

"I think it will be a full year before we find a new director because no one wants to do a job search, and leave a campus in the middle of the year," Carney said.

Former UPC program director Ann Claussen left K-State this summer to take a job as the union director at Moravian College in Bethlehem, Pa.

Sarah Hadley has been appointed as the acting director.

Last year Hadley was a program adviser

"I have been here a year, and I feel I know how the Union operates," she said.

Hadley said she would probably be applying for the director position when the search begins in April.

Carney said Hadley's move from a program adviser to director leaves UPC one staff person short.

This means program advisers will be advising 60 to 100 students each instead of advising 20 to 40 students each, he said.

Carney said the UPC staff was going to try to prevent the staff shortage from affecting the programs UPC provides.

"We have a very young staff," Carney said.

"We are going to try to disperse the work to other people. I don't think it will particularly be a problem," he said. UPC is also looking for two students to fill the Promotions and Multicultural committee chair positions.

Students who are interested need to fill out an application at the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

UPC also has unlimited positions available for committee members for the 10 UPC committees. About 150 students are involved in UPC committees every semester.

Shanele Stires signed a contract Thursday to play professional basketball in Greece. Stires, a first-team all-Big 8 selection, led the Cats in both scoring and rebounding as a senior.

Stires to play professionally in Greece

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

Shanele Stires, one of best women's basketball players in K-State history, signed a contract Thursday to play professionally in Europe. Stires will play throughout Europe for Pagkrati A.O., a team out of Athens, Greece, in Rhonketti Cup action.

An all-Big 8 selection and runner-up for conference Most Valuable Player honors as a senior, Stires left K-State as the No. 5 scorer (1,344 points) and the No. 6 rebounder (701 boards) in school history despite playing only three years in Manhattan.

How did this evolve?

The first thing was, when the season was over last year, I knew a lot of people who had gone over (to Europe) and done it, gone over and played. I really love playing, and I wasn't ready to be done.

For the majority of women, there really is no other outlet than to go overseas. Now there are some leagues forming (in the United States), but that's really the most lucrative thing to do.

So I made some phone calls to some coaches. After about a month went by, Coach Agler set me up with an agent, Bruce Levy and Associates out of New York City, and they handle the majority of the players, as far as finding a place to play overseas. So we went ahead and signed with them and the search was on, and it took a long time.

It's really a strange process. Agents will tell you they're on to something, but there's really no forewarning.

How long ago did you find out about this?

I found out about the possibility of playing in Greece about three weeks ago. This particular contract wasn't offered to me until last Friday, so about six days ago.

Once they offer it to you, it's such a rush-rush deal — they want you over there right then. As soon as they offer it to you, they expect you to leave, and it's just pick up and go.

This is a bit of a step up from being cut from your junior high basketball team.

I'll say.

Over the years, you've played a lot of different positions. In high school, you were a guard. You were recruited as a point guard in community college, then they moved you to center. Here, you've mainly played power forward. Do you know what you'll be playing over there?

More than likely I'll be a small forward. I might even play point guard. European style is a bigger, more offensive game. Players are pretty big, so it's not unusual to have a European point guard at 5-foot 10-inches, 5' 11", or up.

The European players are very versatile, they can do a little bit of everything. It's just going to depend.

The team I'm going to was the fourth-best team in Greece last year, so I think they'll be pretty good.

Has your game changed that much, or are you just adapting to the situations you've been put in? How is it you end up playing so many different positions?

I think when I first started playing basketball, I realized that, with my size, I needed to be as versatile as I could. Does that make sense?

Because you're in the middle, size-wise?

Yeah. I was in the middle range of height, so I could go either way. Someone my size could play a post or a wing at different programs, so I also developed a post game. I ended up here where they needed a post player because they had plenty of guards.

At the same time, I was lucky enough to get in a system where I could do both. Some systems really limit what you can and can't do, and here they really allow you to maximize your full game.

Do you think you've had the opportunity to do that?

Yes.

The league you'll be playing in, do you just play teams in Greece, or do you play all over Europe?

All over Europe. It's called the Rhonketti Cup, and that's like the European championship.

Have you tried the language yet?

No, but there's a thing in the contract where I can take English-to-Greek lessons, and that's another aspect of the contract I'm going to try to do. Then, even though I'm not still in school, I'm still getting an education.

What are you going to make, and how long is the contract?

It's an eight-month contract, and I'll make a base $16,000. With bonuses, I could make $20-30,000.

Is that above the base?

No, $20-30,000 total.

How many American players are playing in European leagues?

I don't know. To be honest with you, I have no idea.

I know that's where a lot of the women coming back to play on the Olympic team played last year. Are you going to be looking at the leagues in the United States when you get done?

Yes. The Women's Basketball Association plays from spring until about this time, so if I can work something out with the Kansas City team, I'd like to do that.

That's something I've thought an awful lot about, and I talked to the coaches last spring, so hopefully that's something I can work into. It's becoming a little more lucrative here, too.

I'm not so worried about making a lot of money because, coming from K-State, I'm not going to make as much. It's going to be one of those things where, just like in high school, just like in college, I'm going to have to prove myself to start making more money.

I'm lucky that women's basketball is taking off here at a good time for myself, because I would like to keep playing. I have a lot of different interests I'm trying to pursue. One of them is to keep playing, and the other is to keep my education going. This is kind of both, especially when you're going overseas.

Depending on how the who experience goes, that will play a big role in whether I want to come back and just play in the WBA or whether I want to do both all year round, or whether I want to just come back and go to school.

I do plan on getting my master's degree.

In public relations?

Yes.

Have you talked to other players who are playing over in Europe, or who have played?

I talked to Jennifer Azzi when she played here from Athletes in Action, she played at Stanford and is on the Olympic team, and her experience was not good. You hear stories.

Sports Illustrated had a pretty harsh piece.

Sports Illustrated painted kind of a grim picture, and Sports Illustrated tends to do that. Maybe it's true, maybe it's not true.

I'm not expecting anything as good as this (at K-State), but the thing is it takes something like the Sports Illustrated article to maybe wake up some people over here into defending their own.

It's kind of sad that we have to go overseas to do something we love to do. It's kind of pathetic. Especially with as much money as rolls around the men's game today.

But that's probably the biggest reason there's not something more here — it can't stand up to the competition. Why would you want to go buy tickets to a women's game?

I say that more from a societal perspective, and that's what society thinks. Society would rather see a guy jump out of the gym rather than see a woman shoot out of the gym. And I can't really blame them, but at the same time, just because we're women doesn't mean we don't want it.

Talented receivers to strengthen offense

In most cases, the top returning receivers in a conference are scattered about — one here, one there and so on.

Mitch Running, Kevin Lockett and Tyson Schwieger are three of the top returning receivers in the Big Eight this season, and the fact that they all play for K-State will help starting quarterback Matt Miller.

This trio has proved it can catch the ball (it combined for 116 catches in 1994) and make the big plays (as evidenced by its 12 touchdowns in 1994). The numbers speak for themselves.

• Last season, Schwieger caught 44 balls for 564 yards and a team-leading seven touchdowns. The senior ranked third in the conference in receiving yards per game (56.4), and second in receptions per game (4.4). Schwieger enters this season as First Team All-Big 8 in both the Football News and Bob Griese's Yearbook.

• Lockett hauled in 39 passes for 583 yards as a sophomore (down from 50 as a freshman) and was ranked as the No. 15 receiver in the Sporting News and a consensus First-Team All-Big 8.

• In his first three seasons at K-State, Running has caught 82 passes for 1,085 yards and three touchdowns. Last season, Running caught 31 for 441 yards and two scores. He also ranked fifth in the Big Eight in punt returns. Running is preseason Honorable Mention's All-Big 8 by both the Associated Press and the Big 8 coaches.

"We set expectations high for ourselves," Lockett said. "We definitely want to be first in the conference as a receiving corps, and we think we can be first in the nation, too."

K-State's offensive philosophy is to spread the ball around to all of the pass catchers so there won't be any 75-catch people for the Wildcats, but there could three or four players with 35 or more catches this season.

"It doesn't matter to me who's catching the passes, as long as someone out there is catching them and not dropping them," Lockett said. "I think if we perform well, and our run-

Thousands come out to show purple pride

> "Fill up the stadium, because we'll be getting after Temple Sept. 2."

Hot dogs, bumper stickers, posters and noise makers were all freebies that Wildcat football fans were handed at the second annual Fan Appreciation Day at KSU Stadium Thursday night.

"Paint it purple Sept. 2," linebacker Percell Gaskins said, but many Wildcat fans picked Thursday to fill the Purple Pit.

A predominantly purple crowd estimated near 3,000 showed up at Wagner Field to watch the final half hour of practice for K-State, followed by speeches and autographs.

When the gates opened, Wildcat football supporters rushed to find the best seats to observe Snyder's team in action.

With the exception of the spring game, the event was the first opportunity for the public to see the Wildcats since Christmas Day.

Sophomore running back Mike Lawrence received roars of delight as he carried the ball through special teams practice.

With Willie the Wildcat leading cheers, fans were apparently impatient to get the season started. K-State's marching band, Classy Cats and cheer squad were all on hand to add to the excitement.

Jeff Grantham of Wildcat Weekly emceed the event. Thanking the fans for showing their purple pride, he shot more excitement through the crowd with the reminder that in this decade, the Cats are 26-3-1 at home.

This figure is the eighth-best home record in the nation during the 1990s.

After a short hello from Coach Bill Snyder, the team's captains invited the fans to Opening Day.

"Fill up the stadium, because we'll be getting after Temple Sept. 2," defensive tackle Dirk Ochs said.

Quarterback Matt Miller gave his season opener's prediction when he said, "I think Sept. 2 you're going to see (a win)."

After the speeches, the crowd was free to swarm the field and battle for autographs. Fans were encouraged to bring memorabilia to the field.

T-Shirts, posters, and footballs were the most popular items, but some of the fans were more imaginative.

One parent even brought his child's underwear. Gaskins, Mitch Running, Ochs and Miller were the most sought-after players.

Eleven-year-old Matt Pray went down on the turf and emulated placekicker Martin Gramatica. Others were busy testing their passing and receiving abilities.

"We've been practicing for two weeks now and can't wait to get out there to play Temple," Running said.

General admission tickets have been sold out since Tuesday, but there are still some reserved seats available on the west side of the stadium.

Bietau: Kuregian top player on team, in conference

Ryan O'Halloran
staff reporter

The start of the practice is still two weeks away, but women's tennis coach Steve Bietau already knows one thing for sure.

Without any hesitation, he said Karina Kuregian was his top player and might be the best player in the entire conference.

"Karina is someone that anyone in the country would like to have coming back," Bietau said. "She's capable of playing No. 1 in most places and clearly is the best returning player in the conference.

"She's one of the top players in the country. She's got an all-court game, and she's a really gifted athlete."

Kuregian shined last season. In singles, Kuregian went 28-7, and she teamed with the now-departed Martine Schrubsole to win the Big 8 doubles title and advance to the NCAA tournament.

With Schrubsole gone, Bietau said he has a few ideas about who will play doubles this season with Kuregian, but nothing is etched in stone.

"We've thought about it a lot, but until we really get going with practice, we won't know what we're going to do," he said.

But whoever plays doubles with Kuregian, Bietau said the Wildcats should have a solid No. 1 pairing.

"In the national scope of things, I would rate her a little higher in doubles," Bietau said. "So Karina, with a number of people, could form a pretty strong doubles team."

Behind Kuregian in the singles lineup, are returning players Karen Nicholson, Dinah Watson, Chris Schulte and Nikki Lagerstorm.

"In terms of level of play, Dinah and Karen are very even, and then Chris and Nikki are pretty even right below those two," Bietau said.

> She's one of the top players in the country. She's got an all-court game, and she's a really gifted athlete.
> STEVE BIETAU, WOMEN'S TENNIS COACH

Bietau also recruited Yasmine Osborn, Laura Williamson, Yana Dorondova and Lena Pilipchak. Dorondova, from Moscow, Russia and Pilipchak, from Kiev, Ukraine, are both sophomore transfers.

Although the season starts Sept. 23 with the Travelers Express Invitational in Manhattan, the Wildcats' first team meet isn't until January.

In the fall, the Cats will participate in singles and doubles tournaments throughout the country. Kuregian will play in all of the events, with the rest of the team playing in two or three of the tournaments.

"Karina will be playing in some big national tournaments this fall that are very important," Bietau said. "So it's a more critical season in terms of competition for her.

"For the players who aren't at a national level yet, it's more of a developmental season for them."

The Wildcats have enough depth in singles that the two freshmen — Osborn and Williamson — won't be called upon to be saviors this season.

"We're a deep enough team right now that I don't feel like there's big pressure that they have to come in and play for us to be successful," Bietau said.

This is something that we want to do. America, this is the 1990s. We should have something, whether we're getting rich or not.

I think if there's the money and the capital out there, it's just a matter of organizing it and making it attractive. I think where there is no professional team and there is no major university would be a nice place to support something like that. Someplace like Salina or Topeka.

Salina loves the Big 8 Tournament.

Right. Especially if you offer it to the upper-echelon college players just like you would in the NBA, it would be entertaining. It wouldn't be that expensive, and it's something that a city that size could stick to.

I just think that women's basketball deserves some kind of limelight. Look at here. We were a competitive, good team, and we were still overshadowed (by the men's team).

People came from miles around to watch the men's team take eighth place rather than watch the women, who have a shot of doing something in the Big 8 Tournament.

How will you remember K-State?

I'm going to miss this place. The first year I lived here, I hated it. I really did. But now — I mean this is my home. I just fit in. I just hope everything goes well over there.

You're going to keep us updated, aren't you?

Yeah, I'll send the team postcards, letters, maybe some newspaper statistics.

I don't think Greece is in the Collegian's travel budget.

You ought to add it, because I won't know anybody when I get over there, and I'll have an apartment all to myself.

I get one round-trip ticket. If it fits into my schedule, I'll come home Christmas. If not, I'll fly somebody out — probably my dad.

It's going to be hard, because I've never been more than an hour from home. And I'm very attached to my family, so this is going to be rough. There's going to be some hard nights.

Stires leaves for Greece Saturday.

ning backs and quarterback perform well, we'll have a great offensive team this year."

The K-State offense will use the non-conference season to get use to Miller, who succeeds Chad May as starting quarterback.

"Receiving from May, well, it's pretty fast," Lockett said. "The ball comes from Matt a little slower, but I don't think to the point that it will affect our timing.

"Matt brings a different look to our offense, as far as being able to run. That will make our offense a lot more versatile."

Miller said he is excited about the group around him.

"My entire supporting cast is great," Miller said. "All I've got to do is direct the ship, and those guys will make the plays happen."

Campus ministries buys 'party house'

Melinda Carter
staff writer

At the corner of Anderson and Denison avenues, a new sign proclaiming "Lutheran Campus Ministries" now hangs where a neon wildcat head used to perch.

The house used to be known as the Party House.

"That house is a great location for campus ministry," the Rev. Jayne Thompson, campus pastor, said.

Though she doesn't know whether to attribute the new location to an act of God or just coincidence, Thompson said she is definitely pleased.

The corner of Anderson and Denison is a good location for the house, said Rich Lissitschenko, peer minister and resident at the Luther House.

"The cross between Anderson Avenue and Denison Avenue is very busy, and everybody sees the house. Maybe it's because of the past, but it's visible and close to campus," Lissitschenko, graduate student in education, said.

A few years of wear and tear created the need for some fixing up.

"We completely repainted the interior and the exterior. We redid the hardwood floor upstairs and have redone pretty much both of the bathrooms," Thompson said.

Lissitschenko said about 15 people fixed up the house during the summer.

"This summer, everybody chipped in, and there was lots of enthusiasm because we knew it was our place," he said.

Lissitschenko and the two other residents of the Luther House agreed that the house would be shared with other organizations, including groups like Habitat for Humanity, Lissitschenko said.

"The main goal here is to share and let others know they're welcome," he said.

Lutheran Campus Ministries plans to further renovate the house but is waiting for further funding and ownership of the house before that happens.

Lutheran Campus Ministries began renting the house June 1 and has every intention of purchasing it someday. The ministry is now trying to gatherfunds for a down payment.

"We have over $20,000, so far," Thompson said.

There is also a private donor who is willing to match up to about that same amount as a donation, she said.

To help with the cost, the Lost and Found will be coming to K-State in November to play in a money-raising concert at All Faiths Chapel.

Meanwhile, the Luther House will be home for three peer ministers, and its doors will be open to anyone who wants to stop in.

The peer ministers usually meet Thursday nights and have dinner and a Bible study with students, Lissitschenko said.

"I think people are searching for a community to belong to, and we want them to be able to come here," Thompson said.

I'm fine, even two days before I'm not nervous," Sanders said. "Then right before I go out on stage I just want to pee my pants. I feel I'm just going to die. But once I'm on stage and in front of people, I'm fine."

Other than the stress, being stereotyped is also a negative side to this form of competition, Sanders said.

"I think that everybody thinks that we're all airheads and that we're stuck up," Sanders said.

Little girls and boys think beauty contestants are little glass princesses with no worries and with perfect lives, she said.

"But let me tell you, I was around 50 of the most average, normal teenagers. They are just like everybody else," Sanders said as she described the Miss Teen USA pageant.

Although Sanders was initially not sure if she would have the time to go to college during her commitment, she said the people at the pageant encouraged her to further her education but just to keep a pretty flexible schedule.

"They wanted me to be as normal as possible," Sanders said.

But being normal and blending in is hard when you're always recognized.

"The other day I was walking on campus and I could hear somebody saying 'Oh my god' and they were looking at me not saying anything, she said.

"Also, because I have such an unusual name, if we have to introduce ourselves in class they recognize my name or because I'm from Louisberg," Sanders said.

Her boyfriend, a junior at K-State, has been very understanding of her busy schedule and not at all jealous of the attention she gets, even from other guys, she said.

"The guy I'm seeing now has been so wonderful. He is so happy for me. He liked me before I won," Sanders said. "To him it's not like, 'I'm going out with Miss Teen USA.' He'd be more likely to say 'I'm dating Keylee Sanders.'"

K-State has also been very welcoming, Sanders said.

"Everybody is so friendly, and I love the campus. All the professors, so far, have been very understanding and nothing is hard to find on campus," Sanders said.

"I think it's really cool because somebody was asking me how to get somewhere, and I even knew," she said.

PHONES

"For instance, say a student or staff member were working late and a fire began or a water line broke. It would have taken them five to six minutes to call for help. Now, the phones will be in the buildings, and the response time will be increased," he said.

Students said they would use the phones for emergencies and probably use the escort service more because of the phones.

"If I have late study groups, I would probably call the escort service if the phones were in the building. Now I just call one of my roommates to come pick me up," Melisa O'Brate, junior in accounting, said.

A 15-member committee led by Spicer suggested placement for the courtesy telephones. In choosing which halls to place the telephones in, they took into consideration where night classes are conducted and the availability of pay phones in the buildings.

"We want them to be used for safety purposes only," Spicer said.

Safety includes accessibility.

The telephones will be consistent with the Americans with Disabilities Act. They will consist of off and on buttons and a keypad. There will also be an intercom speaker instead of a receiver.

Damkroger helped develop the design of the telephones. They have the Power Cat logo and the campus police and escort phone numbers etched into a silk screen.

The idea for the courtesy telephones began with the creation of the Wildcat Walk last year. Previously, each residence hall had their own escorts. Keen took the initiative to consolidate the escorts and had 120 volunteers to help run it.

The Wildcat Walk, which will formally begin on Sept. 1, aims for a response time of five minutes, depending on the location. The caller will be asked where and when to meet, the number of people who need an escort and the destination.

A male and female pair are then sent to the place of meeting. They wear armbands that are custom-made and must be checked in and out when working. It is a possibility that they will be getting ID cards also, Keen said.

If you are interested in becoming an escort for the Wildcat Walk, please contact 395-SAVE or 532-SAVE. There are also applications at the front desk of each residence hall.

In 1996, an escort service will be formed to walk students five to six blocks off campus.

DROP

Caps are placed on classes, especially classes that involve a great deal of written work, so the work load will not become too great for teachers.

Fire regulations also restrict the number of people who can be in classrooms.

Provost James Coffman said the University tries to add class where needed, but there are financial and space limitations.

Drop/add has become so prevalent that there is often more advising than teaching in the first week , Benson said.

So many students try to add Expository Writing I and II that the English department advised the course's graduate teaching assistants to discourage students who are not enrolled in the classes from attending the classes.

The GTAs are also instructed not to assign any significant writing assignments the first week because there will be students adding the class.

Irene Ward, Expository Writing Program director, said the policy was created to protect students and to limit stress on teachers.

Ward said Expository Writing is difficult to get into because it is a required course.

"I have had students that have sat in on classes for three or four weeks and not gotten into the class," she said. "It is a waste of the students' time and a waste of teachers' time to grade papers of people who are not going to be in the class."

Students can get on waiting lists for classes, but the lists are used primarily to keep a record of how many students were unable to get into classes.

The computer will not automatically add a student on a waiting list to a class when someone drops. The student must go through the drop/add process in person when a spot opens up.

Representatives from the Registrar's Office said they did not keep a record of how many students use drop/add, but said the office was steadily busy most of the first week.

Terri Schump, sophomore in secondary education, was trying to get into Expository Writing but was having problems because all the sections were full.

She was able to add the class after six trips to the enrollment center and several hours waiting in line.

"I kept going around and around, and finally it paid off," she said.

Schump said she felt as she was behind because of the classes she missed.

"I know most of the class was introduction this week, but they did write a little this week," she said.

Schump said she thought she lost time in her other classes because teachers were reluctant to introduce important information.

"I felt my teachers were holding back," she said. "I felt like I was sitting there for no reason."

Sarah Caldwell, Expository Writing GTA, said students have to be introduced to the class before they can do any large writing assignments. She said introduction time was scheduled into the course, and it would not put the class behind.

"I don't kick students out of the class," Caldwell said. "I usually explain it to them, and they say thanks and that they understand."

Caldwell said students who attend an Expository Writing class that they are not enrolled in might be wasting their time because the class sections differ.

The students might not get into the section they have been attending.

She said she understands how students feel.

"It's very frustrating for students because classes are closed and when they go to drop/add the lines are four miles long," Caldwell said.

Most departments and colleges don't have policies about students who are not enrolled in classes attending the classes until they can add.

Some colleges recognize there will be a lot of class juggling the first week of school and encourage students wanting to add classes to attend until they can add.

It is usually left to professors to decide whether to give students permission to add classes or attend classes until they can enroll.

Benson said the drop/add problem is the result of two things: lack of funding and students enrolling in classes they intend to drop.

A shortage of funding keeps the University from adding more sections, he said.

'Lips' deals with anger, social issues

Aaron Brungardt
staff writer

KSU Theatre re-opened the performance of "Lips Together, Teeth Apart," by Terrance McNally Thursday night at Nichols Theater.

Conflicts are abundant throughout the entire script. The play is filled with lopsided arguments between two couples during a Fourth of July weekend.

Be prepared to be offended. Discriminating remarks against homosexuals and a racial slur are part of the dialogue.

The characters, however, are vivid.

Dan Shea, who played Sam Truman, is delightfully funny. His character is a man of patience and kindness, yet he can be annoying with his energetic impulses, as well as being homophobic.

Chloe Haddock, Sam Truman's older sister, is a delightful, insightful bolt of energy. Always singing and dancing, actor Jennifer Grace has a hidden gem within her deceiving innocence.

Travis Malone plays the emotionless John Haddock, Chloe's husband. John is overbearing, cold, insensitive, and is afraid of opening himself up to anyone; to him, that would be a sign of weakness.

Finally, Gretchen Morgan, as Sally Truman, plays Sam's wife. Suffering from the abuse of confusion and bad luck, Truman has to gather her wits and confidence to mettle with the fortunes of life.

Lighting, perfected by instructor John Uthoff, showed the effects of water, the position of the sun, and fireworks.

The three-scene play is set on the banks of the Atlantic Ocean in Fire Island, New York, where Sally and Sam reside. The acts are separated by times of the day on July 4.

The plot begins with the Haddocks visiting their relatives for the holiday weekend. Already, John begins to be rude and gives the silent treatment to everyone.

Chloe drives everyone crazy by trying to make them content by spoiling everyone and not leaving anyone alone. Sam begins to rummage through everything, creating a hassle, while Sally wonders why this man is swimming so far into the rough waters of the unforgiving ocean.

John had a short affair with Sally, which she is now regretting. However, John has been diagnosed with cancer. Sam is suspicious of John and Sally, but doesn't act on the idea, with the fear of perhaps being right.

Chloe remains tolerant of John avoiding her presence by bringing up old memories with her brother.

Sally keeps her pregnancy in secret as she attempts to grasp the knowledge of what it is she must do with her life.

They conflict with hate against the neighbors, who are homosexuals.

While all four characters change, they confine their thoughts and words to themselves.

The production has a predictable denouement, but the events comprising the climax should keep you guessing which path will lead to the end.

Future performances of "Lips Together, Teeth Apart" will be through Saturday this weekend and from Aug. 30 to Sept. 2.

Tickets may be purchased or reserved at the McCain box office from noon to 5 p.m. weekdays, or by calling (913) 532-6428.

Senate would be roll call," Potter said.

Renee Fisher, arts and sciences senator, said she thought the change was a good idea.

"I think it shows we're responsible," Fisher said. "I think it shows our constituents that as well."

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator and State and Community Affairs Committee chairman, proposed an amendment requiring all appointees to attend the meeting when their appointments would be approved.

The amendment passed. The standing rules passed on a voice vote.

Bills up for first reading included a resolution requiring organizations with fees up for review this term to provide Senate with information about how the service would be affected by the implementation of optional or user fees.

The Board of Student Publications, Fine Arts Council, Student Health Advisory Committee, Union Program Council and Intercollegiate Athletic Council have fees up for review.

Two bills changing the selection of the attorney general to an election were also given first readings. The bills propose the election of the attorney general be similar to that of the student body president and vice president.

The final bill presented was a special allocations bill to fund the annual Senate retreat Sept. 8 to 10. Senators will be required to pay $10 toward the expenses. The $1,792.50 allocation would be taken out of the Foundation Account.

"The Foundation Account is not in competition with money for student groups," said Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator and Senate vice chair.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Riley County Relay for Life raises money for American Cancer Society

"I was 32-years-old, and I thought my life was over."
MARK OWENS, CANCER SURVIVOR

Nikola Zytkow
staff writer

Wiping the beads of perspiration from her face, Tibi Marin kept a vigorous pace around the track of Memorial Stadium Saturday night.

To her, the 12-hour walk-a-thon to raise money for the American Cancer Society was more than just a cause to advocate.

Marin, a K-State graduate student and Manhattan High School geology teacher, suffered from bone cancer eight years ago.

"God has given me the opportunity to have cancer, so I can look at life with different eyes," she said. "You have to have a positive attitude to fight this disease."

Marin was one of many cancer survivors who participated in the Riley County Relay for Life along with more than 200 area residents whose lives have been in touched by cancer.

Walking to the music of KQLA-FM 103.5 and the ever-present sound of the cicadas, the 22 teams in the relay collectively raised $20,100. This was about a $100 more than was raised last year.

"Every family knows somebody with this disease," said Jean Caril, a member of the St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

Her walking partner, Frank Connizzo, said both his mother-in-law and father-in-law had died of cancer. The pair said they planned to walk for two hours before trading off with someone else from their team.

Each person on a team is asked to collect at least $100, said Marlene Franke, office specialist for the school of journalism and team leader. She and Nancy Hause, retired assistant professor of journalism and mass communication, sat by a tent they had pitched and waited for their turn to walk.

"My father died of lung cancer 43 years ago," Hause said, adding that her father was an avid smoker. "He would think this was so strange (the idea of a fundraiser for cancer)."

During those times, people didn't know the dangers of smoking, Hause said.

"There's a much better attitude about it today," she said.

What hasn't changed about cancer is the misconception that cancer is a death sentence, Marin said.

She pulled up her shirt sleeve and revealed a large scar where the cancer had stricken her bones. Marin said she is living proof the disease can be conquered and that there is always hope.

Her surgery, which involved the transfer of bone from her hip and lower leg to the arm, left her unable to do strenuous activities.

"I can't go hiking anymore, but I can still walk," Marin said.

Judy Johnson walked with her husband, Lee Johnson, for the Kansas Lumber Homestore. Not only did Lee's mother die of cancer 20 years ago, but Judy faced the diagnosis of uterine cancer.

"The only way to fight it is to keep your checkups regular," Judy said. "Don't be afraid even if the doctor might tell you something that you don't want to hear."

Kent Glasscock and his stepson Harrison McCants, also members of the Homestore team, were busy filling white paper bags with dirt, placing a candle in each and arranging them to spell out HOPE on the west side of the stadium.

Glasscock's father, Bill Glasscock, recently went into full remission after fighting prostate cancer.

"I'm going to stay up the whole night," McCants said.

Nearly 900 bags with names of survivors as well as victims of the disease lined the entire stadium, each only inches apart from the next.

Inscribed on each were a few words to the loved one remembered; to Dorothy Johnson — the greatest mom; I remember you Uncle Craig — from Michael Meier. There was even a bag in memory of Mickey Mantle.

At the 10 p.m. luminary ceremony, the candles were lit. The walking and running ceased as participants joined in a prayer led by the Rev. Kenneth Kirkendoll.

"I lost my father to cancer of the colon when I was 8-years-old," Kirkendoll said.

Mark Owens, a cancer survivor, shared his story with the group. A year ago, while going in for some minor surgery, Owens was told he had colon cancer.

"I was 32-years-old, and I thought my life was over," Owens said.

He was given a 40-percent chance to live. Aug. 1, he finished therapy and went into remission.

"For me, hope is not just a word, but a living reality," Owens said, adding that the money raised by the American Cancer Society, which often goes toward research, helps that hope.

The money also goes to help provide transportation for patients going to chemotherapy and other treatments.

By 5:30 am., the candles had exhausted their life-cycles and only the determined few could be seen still running.

The closing ceremony began, and prizes were handed out. Among others, the Fort Riley's 101st Military Intelligence Unit won a plaque for running 388 laps continuously, the most laps run during the 12-hour span. K-State's ROTC unit came in next with 280 continuous laps.

The Episcopal Church and Commerce Bank won for walking the most laps, 210 and 192, respectively, and the K-State Women's Caucus raised the most money, $3,212.

Students injured in hit-and-run

Melissa Hoyt
staff writer

Two K-State students were run over Friday night after an argument.

Thamer Aidi, a sophomore in industrial engineering, and Timothy Carter, a sophomore in agricultural business, were confronted by the occupants of a white or light-blue colored jeep.

The confrontation resulted in injuries for both Aidi and Carter.

Aidi sustained injuries to his stomach and ankle, while Carter sustained injuries to his shins and his right foot.

Aidi was taken to the Saint Mary Hospital by ambulance, while Carter refused treatment at the scene.

Aidi said he had been at a party and was walking home.

"There was a fight going on across the street, so I went over to see if any of my fraternity brothers were over there," Aidi, a member of Delta Tau Delta, said.

Aidi said once he saw no one he knew, he started to leave.

"This one guy started yelling things and acted like he was going to knee me in the groin," Aidi said.

Aidi said he left and went back to his fraternity.

"We went back out and then this jeep pulled up," Aidi said.

Aidi said someone recognized one of the guys in the jeep as one who was involved in the earlier confrontation.

There was an exchange of punches, Aidi said, and then the occupants of the jeep noticed more of Aidi's fraternity brothers coming.

"I heard someone say 'get out of here,' and the next thing I knew I was seeing the underside of the jeep," Aidi said.

Aidi said the jeep went in reverse across his stomach, and then went forward across his ankle.

"The doctor said I was lucky," Aidi said.

"Any lower, the tires would have hit my pelvis, and any higher, they would have hit ribs."

Freshman's sudden death attributed to heart failure

Claudette Riley
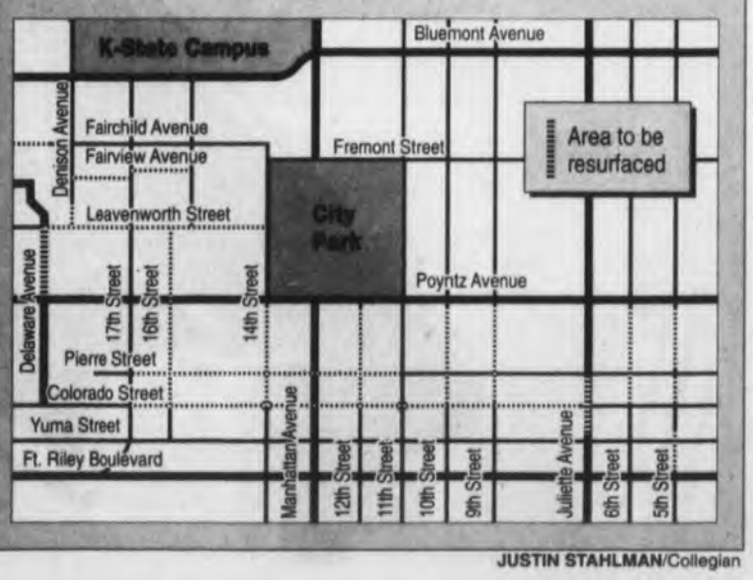
staff writer

Nicholas Goedeker, a freshman in architecture, died at 3 p.m. Sunday at Memorial Hospital.

Friends checked on Goedeker at about 12:30 a.m. Sunday. He opened the door to his room at 702 Haymaker and collapsed soon after.

The residence hall assistant and a former staff member both performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation until paramedics arrived from Memorial Hospital. He was transported to the Memorial Hospital intensive care unit, where he died yesterday afternoon. Doctors said the cause of death was heart arrhythmia.



Goedeker, a May 1994 graduate of Bishop Dubourg High School, transferred from St. Louis Community College at Meramec.

Goedeker was the son of Tim and Carol Goedeker, St. Louis, Mo. He was born August 23, 1976. Funeral arrangements are pending with Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home.

Cars towed due to street repairs

Cars towed from construction areas

Vehicles are being towed in road resurfacing areas because warning signs are being stolen. These streets will be resurfaced this week. Vehicles will be towed if they are parked on these streets between 6 a.m. and 8 p.m.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Melissa Hoyt
staff writer

Imagine coming out of your apartment and finding your car missing.

No, it has not been stolen — just towed.

Students parking their cars in the area of the city resurfacing project have had their cars towed on a regular basis.

Shilling Construction Co. Inc., Manhattan, is doing the actual resurfacing, but it has been faced with the problem of cars being parked on the designated streets.

Teresa Hageberg, office manager for Shilling, said the company has placed signs of notification and cones to warn residents of the construction.

"The problem is that the signs are being taken down and the cones are being stolen," she said.

Hageberg said the construction crews show up on the job site around 6 a.m. and have to notify the Riley County Police Department.

"People just need to know even if they don't see us for a couple of days, we are still working in the area and can't have cars parked in the street between 6 a.m. and 8 p.m.," Hageberg said.

Evening parking in the area of construction is fine, but cars have to be moved before 6 a.m., she said.

"The total project is estimated to be done by this Friday," Hageberg said.

TATON INVESTIGATION CLOSED; DEATH RULED AS SELF-INFLICTED

The stabbing investigation of a Goodnow Hall resident was closed last week.

The case sent homicide and suicide speculations running across campus Jan. 10, was closed last week.

Ross Taton, junior in engineering, died two days before the spring semester after two hall residents found him gulping water from a first floor water fountain with a stab wound penetrating his chest.

Riley County Police Department, Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the K-State Police worked together to gather pieces of evidence concerning Taton's death.

Trace fingernail samples, blood types, hair follicles, the knife found on the scene and a possible suicide note were all sent to the KBI headquarters in Topeka for testing, Richard Herrman, K-State detective, said.

"It was one of those types of situations where you want to put your hands on something really quick," Herrman said.

A bloody knife, untampered locks and lack of motive eventually led investigators to conclude that Taton's death was self-inflicted, he said.

After reviewing final test results last week County Attorney William Kennedy said any further investigation should be closed unless evidence does appear. However, according to KBI reports the wound was self-inflicted.

"We've waited a long time," Ronnie Grice, K-State Chief of Police, said. "The administration and the student body are ready for it to be closed."

WU RELEASE MAY SIGNAL A REPAIR OF AMERICAN-CHINESE RELATIONS

BEIJING — American and Chinese officials agreed Sunday to begin planning a fall presidential summit — signaling that China's release of human rights activist Harry Wu may have begun to repair months of deteriorating relations.

Undersecretary of State Peter Tarnoff said the two sides had agreed to discuss an agenda for a meeting between President Clinton and Chinese President Jiang Zemin in the United States in October.

But Tarnoff, the highest-level U.S. official to visit since relations began to sour in May, said much work needed to be done before a meeting could happen.

China and the United States remain far apart on a number of issues. Tarnoff said negotiators would discuss a wide array of topics, but refused to elaborate.

China's government has been pushing for the meeting since May, when ties faltered over a decision to let the Taiwanese president attend his college reunion in the United States.

ATTACKER OFFERED TO SELL VICTIM TO CROWD OF BYSTANDERS

DETROIT — A witness to a woman's beating and fatal plunge off a bridge said most onlookers were afraid to intervene against a man so enraged at his victim over a traffic accident that he offered to sell her.

"He asked if 'anybody wanted to buy some of this bitch, because she has to pay for my car,'" witness Harvey Mayberry said. "A couple little smart-ass kids said, 'I've got $10,' and things like that.

"It's not that people didn't want to help," he said. "We were in a position where we could not help."

Deletha Word, 33, drowned in the predawn hours on August 19 after she jumped from the Belle Isle bridge into the Detroit River. Martell Welch, 19, was charged with murder.

Richard Padzieski, an assistant Wayne County prosecutor, said Mayberry's allegation Friday that the suspect offered Word to the crowd was new.

"Either his memory has improved or he's embellishing," Padzieski said.

Police Cmdr. Gerald Stewart also said he had not heard the allegation.

However, Mayberry, a 40-year-old city bus driver, said he was sure about what he saw and would take to a lie-detector test.

Mayberry said he was among 15 to 20 people on the bridge who watched in horror as the man slugged, kicked and choked the woman, who had been stripped to her panties.

He said the attacker then dragged her toward the edge of the bridge, picked up a jack and said "I ought to throw you over the bridge."

"Just as he was getting closer, that's when she stepped over the edge of the bridge," he said. "She stood there for five or 10 seconds. Once he drew the jack back to hit her, that's when she let go."

Stewart said other witnesses have said the attacker wielded a tire iron against the woman's car, but had put it away before Word jumped into the river.

Mayberry said two men in the crowd jumped into the water to rescue Word, but that she apparently thought they also meant harm.

Group modernizes African farms

Rick Druse
staff reporter

Famine spread across northern Africa in 1984. Chris Akhimien, a Nigerian native, had a vision telling him to do something to stop the hunger.

Akhimien came to K-State and received his master's degree in agriculture economics.

He worked on Kansas farms for two years, learning farming techniques and practices.

In 1990, he formed the Manhattan-based organization Tractors For Our Daily Bread.

Tractors For Our Daily Bread is a non-profit organization that is using Ford 8-N tractors to help mechanize African farms.

Akhimien said he believes if African farmers are given the opportunity of mechanized farming, they can become self-reliant.

"We are not trying to build up a welfare system. We try to provide equal opportunity for self-reliance," he said.

Each farmer who receives a tractor must complete a one-year training program about the tractor and agriculture techniques.

After the farmers complete this course, they are required to teach other farmers.

Plans are being made for a payment program so the farmers can buy the tractors.

"The tractors are not given away. We hope in the long run the farmers should be able to pay for the tractor," Akhimien said.

Akhimien said it takes about $6,000 to get one tractor to Africa, $2,500 to buy the tractor, $2,500 to refurbish the tractor and $1,000 to ship the tractor to Africa.

Tractors For Our Daily Bread shipped six tractors last spring to Jos, Nigeria.

During the 1994 planting season, the farmers were able to produce 8,000 pounds of maize from 80 acres of land.

The maize was sold to determine the amount of revenue that can be produced by these farms.

Tractors for Our Daily Bread has branched out with offices in Longview, Wash.; Cape Maine, N.J.; and Wilmington, Del.

They have acquired 44 tractors that are in the refurbishing process.

Debra Frey, assistant director of development, has been helping to keep the Manhattan office running while Akhimien is working to build branch offices.

"We have some tractors that we really need help in getting fixed up," Frey said.

Tractors For Our Daily Bread fixes the tractors through donations.

SPONSORSHIP

▶ For more information on tractor sponsorship contact Tractors For Our Daily Bread at (913) 776-7902.

Individuals and groups can adopt and become a sponsor for a tractor.

Frey said there are seven tractors in the Manhattan area that are in need of a sponsorship.

One long-range goals for Tractors For Our Daily Bread is to establish more offices across the country.

Eventually they would like to build a parts factory in Africa, Akhimien said.

"Ten years down the road, I would like to see 20-percent of the farms mechanized. And also a factory that could make the parts for the tractors in place," he said.

Senators resign seats; spots available in SGA

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Two graduate school senators resigned, leaving the graduate school under represented in Student Senate.

Carlene Kaiser and Todd Moore have both resigned their Senate seats in favor of work and their educations.

At the time of her resignation, Kaiser said she was looking into beginning a doctoral program. Now she is focusing more on graduating and looking for a job.

Kaiser said she had to resign because she was only enrolled in three credit hours instead of the required six.

"At the time I ran, I thought I would have an assistantship," Kaiser said. "If I would have gotten the assistantship, I would have stayed in."

When she did not get the assistantship, Kaiser did not have enough money to take more hours of class. She said she plans to focus more on her education and graduating with her second master's degree in May.

"I'm looking to go out and get a job," Kaiser said.

The vacancies left by Kaiser and Moore cannot be filled for at least two weeks, John Potter, Senate chair, said.

In the general election in April, three write-in candidates tied. Now it's up to the Graduate School Council to determine which students will fill the positions, Potter said.

College councils or school councils must advertise or make it known the positions are open. Then the council must determine how the selection process will be handled.

Graduate school costs more than undergraduate classes, Potter said. It is understandable for them to put school before Senate, he said.

"We're all here to go to school not to be in Senate," he said. "We can't let that get in the way of our goals and dreams for life."

Senate by-laws recognize the time commitment involved with graduate school, he said.

Graduate senators do not have to serve an office hour or be on standing committees. Undergraduate senators have to serve one office hour a week and serve on one standing committee.

The College of Veterinary Medicine also has a vacant seat. Its Senate seat has been vacant since the April election.

"I have written letters to both councils," Potter said.

Now the councils need to take the final action to fill the seats.

Potter said he is expecting at least two more resignations. Ryan Laudermilk, arts and sciences senator, has been chosen to study in Spain so he will give up his seat, Potter said.

Dan Lewerenz, arts and sciences senator, will resign his seat to become the athletic liaison on the student body president's cabinet, he said.

"Dan can't serve in both at the same time," Potter said.

Laudermilk told Potter he would need to resign on April 27. When the trip abroad came through, Laudermilk spoke with Potter about making sure someone was able to take his seat as soon as possible.

"Ryan impressed me with the incite he had into the entire process," Potter said.

Student Senate misappropriates student funds

Senate has always made themselves an exception, usually by claiming that if Senate operates smoothly, that helps everyone else operate smoothly.

Once again, Student Senate has found it necessary to ignore its own funding guidelines. By voting to allocate $1,792.50 for the annual Senate retreat, senators offer themselves a perk not available to other students on campus.

Leadership retreats are invaluable to the development of student leaders in any organization. But as a rule, Senate has refused to fund such events for anyone other than themselves.

Students can rest assured that if Black Student Union or Circle K International or any other campus group asks for assistance with their own leadership retreat, it will never make it out of committee.

Senate has always made themselves an exception, usually by claiming that if Senate operates smoothly, that helps everyone else operate smoothly. Thus, a Senate retreat is beneficial to all students.

This excuse is embarrassingly thin. A BSU retreat could develop strategies for educating all students about black issues. A Circle K retreat could focus on means of bringing community service to the campus and Manhattan, improving our living environment.

And this latest request for retreat funding is even more hypocritical. Senate's guidelines for the Foundation Account allow funding only of non-recurring events, and would obviously prohibit Senate's annual fall ritual.

Additionally, this attempt to siphon the money from the Foundation Account robs the student body of their only interest-earning account.

No one is forced to run for office, nor are the costs of the retreat unanticipated. It is simply unreasonable to expect the student body to pay for the education of student senators.

Abortion: the good kill ?

■ Taking a pre-born life is not always the wrong thing to do.

Sometimes it's OK to kill.

I know that idea may seem harsh to many, but the Sixth Commandment aside, killing is a necessary, if unpleasant, part of life.

"Thou Shall Not Kill" is a qualified statement, and probably should read as, "Thou Shall Not Kill except in certain situations where killing is acceptable to your culture."

Mind you, I am not the one who is rewriting God's laws. Our Judaeo-Christian culture has already done that. It has long been accepted in our culture that some forms of killing are not wrong, contrary to the Sixth Commandment — although some would argue that the intent of the Sixth Commandment is not a prohibition against killing, but against murder.

However, for the purposes of this essay, I am using the King James Version of the bible, which states, "Thou Shall Kill."

Some of the situations in which it is acceptable to kill in our culture include:

■ Killing in self-defense

■ Killing condemned criminals, a.k.a. the death penalty

■ Killing non-human animals for food, clothing or sport

■ Killing in tribal disputes, a.k.a war

■ Killing to end prolonged suffering, as in euthanasia, or just pulling the plug

■ Killing a pre-born baby, a.k.a. aborting a fetus.

COLUMN

KEVYN JACOBS

Yes, I said killing an unborn baby. I have no doubt in my mind that the pro-life forces are correct on this point — abortion is a form of killing. After all, before an abortion, there is something alive in the mother's womb, and after the abortion, it is dead. A killing has taken place.

But so what?

So what if abortion is killing? Does that make abortion wrong? I don't believe so, because I don't believe it is always wrong to kill. I believe that abortion is one of those cases where we have the right to kill. Or, more accurately, the mother has the right to choose to kill the child she is carrying.

Mind you, killing is not something I take lightly — to take another animal's life (human or otherwise) is not an act that I believe one should commit casually. Indeed, killing is an ethically difficult path to take. The benefits of killing must outweigh the value of the victim's life. And that valuation is very subjective.

But sometimes you need to kill. It's part of our genetic and cultural heritage. Killing is a part of the natural world.

> "Needless to say, abortion as a form of birth control is not something I would support."
> KEVYN JACOBS

So who should make the valuation of taking a human life? Who has the right to decide when it is OK to kill?

The simple answer for many theists would be God. But as an atheist, I don't have any such luxury. In my universe, a universe without any objective right or wrong, value can only be placed subjectively by those animals whose job it is to place value — homo sapiens sapiens. Us.

Collectively, we have decided that killing is justified in the cases I have outlined above. And collectively, we have also decided that a mother has the right to kill a pre-born child.

It is the mother who has the right to determine when the benefits of abortion would outweigh the value of the child's life. I'm fine with that.

This is not, incidentally, a ringing endorsement of abortion on demand. As I stated earlier, abortion, as a form of killing, is something that should not be entered into lightly.

Adoption is certainly preferable to abortion once the life has been conceived. (Yes, I do believe that life begins at conception - but whether that life is human or has value are subjective decisions for the mother to make.)

Needless to say, abortion as a form of birth control is not something I would support.

Although I do not advocate making them illegal, I am also uncomfortable with late-term abortions, once the fetus' nervous system has developed. By that time, the fetus can feel pain and has a limited awareness of the world.

Third trimester abortions should be performed with even more trepidation than abortions performed in the first two trimesters.

But even the fetus' pain and awareness is relative. The average cow that is killed for your Double Whopper with cheese is far more aware of the world around it, and has a far more developed nervous system, than a nine-month-old pre-born child. I am not convinced that we should treat that cow's life, fear and pain with any less reverence than we treat that baby's.

But then, I don't see myself as anything but an animal, just like that cow, albeit with some remarkable abilities.

And that is a topic for another column.

Writer considers student banking

What does a cooler have to do with choosing a bank?

Selecting a financial institution to entrust your money can be a challenge. With the many choices, how do you decide whether bank "X" is better than the next? You should consider the following: insurance protection, convenience, fees, services offered and reputation.

Banking is getting very competitive here in Manhattan. When I moved to Manhattan last year, none of the banks were offering free checking without a minimum balance. Now several banks offer it and even have special accounts for college students. One bank offers seminars on money management for new college students.

COLUMN

SCOTT SMITH

Even if you don't have $100,000 in your checking account, it is nice to know that your $500 is insured.

Most banks and saving and loan institutions are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, most credit unions by National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund. With this protection, which is backed by the federal government, you're assured that should the institution fail, you'll get your money (up to $100,000) back. Most banks and saving and loan institutions post notice of insurance coverage on their door.

Convenience should be a very important factor in deciding on a bank. Not just where the bank and its branches are located, but hours of operation and number of Automated Teller Machines. Another convenience item is an automated telephone voice response system that will give you account information such as current balance, deposits and checks processed.

In the grand scheme of deposits, your $500 sounds insignificant compared to $100,000 accounts. But your money is no less important, and you'll want to earn interest on it if you can.

Find out about the minimum amount to open an account and to maintain the account without a service charge. Why pay bank "X" $5 a month in service charges, when bank "Y" will do it for free? I would rather buy a pitcher of beer for my buddies with that 5 bucks than pay some banker who doesn't even know my name. One bank in town will give you a cooler in exchange for opening a new checking account and only charge you $3 a month as a service charge. In four or five months you could pay for the cooler yourself.

Make sure to ask for a full disclosure of the bank's fee for checks, travelers checks, overdrafts, stop payments and copies of canceled checks. You might ask if the bank offers overdraft protection, it could save you a fair amount of money.

Balancing a checkbook is an essential skill that most college students lack. Bouncing a check is not a fun experience and can cost you $20 to $60 or even more. Overdraft protection could be your solution to this problem.

ATM overdose? These modern miracles can become an addiction. Unfortunately, most ATM charge a fee of $1 to $3 for each withdrawal, or if it is not your bank's ATM. Aggieville needs another ATM and preferably located in a large drinking establishment. If you are like me and never bring along enough cash for the night's activities, you will have to walk to the ATM for your needed influx of cash. But, the ATM in Aggieville is not my bank, so I will be charged $1 to use it. The ATM can be good and bad, just don't let it sabotage your checkbook with these fees.

Direct deposit? It is really gratifying to see my name on my paycheck with those five digits after the dollar sign.

But, I am really considering having my paycheck directly deposited into my checking account. It could be deposited electronically into my checking account on the first of the month, which would save me time.

If you get money from your parents, your parents' bank should be able to arrange for a direct deposit of funds directly from their account into yours.

Just think, this could end the monthly mail watch or those fun discussion with mom and dad concerning money.

Before depositing your money into any bank, shop around to get the best deal for your financial needs. It may be a good idea to check with your friends about any experiences they may have had with the local banks. Reputation and personal experiences are critical.

▶ MISMANAGED MONEY

Editor,

Although early on in the political careers of most, I find myself already in disagreement with some of our newly-elected student senators.

This Thursday, Student Senate will vote on an allocations bill to fund a retreat for senators and other student government personnel in the amount of $1,792.50 from its Foundation Account. That's a lot of money for a weekend.

In light of the recent promises of our student body president to lower campus privilege fees again this year, this seems like a good place to realize some savings. In addition to my disagreement with the philosophy behind this allocation, there is apparently some misinformation circulating about the Foundation Account.

One senator was quoted as saying, "The Foundation Account is not in competition with money for student groups."

This could not be farther from the truth.

All monies allocated by Student Senate are for student groups. The Foundation Account is certainly no exception. Several student groups received funding from this account last year.

The only requirements to fund a project with money from this account are that the project have the potential to benefit the entire student body and that the project not be a recurring event.

By all outward appearances, this IS a recurring event. It takes place every year. This retreat is a nearly $2,000 per year tradition that should cease.

It doesn't even conform to senate's own funding guidelines.

This is money that senate should put to better use elsewhere.

Sincerely,
Ben Clouse
Graduate student in Accounting

▶ SENSELESS VIOLENCE

Editor,

This weekend has given me a lot to think about; several different things happened Friday night which, in my opinion, should never have happened. Two young men, one of whom I've known for about a semester, the other I've known for about two weeks, were run down and left for dead. This was not an accident. I do not claim to know everything that led up to this, but apparently several other young men decided to back over them.

One was dragged along for several feet under the jeep, and the other had a wheel actually go up onto his side. The drivers then drove away.

Some of our neighbors saw the incident and called 911, and a police report was made. One of the victims was bandaged on the spot, but the other was taken to the hospital.

One minute everyone's having a good time, the next several of us are helping paramedics lift a young guy just barely into his first week at K-state into an ambulance.

About fifteen minutes after this, I was on the phone with my parents in Kansas City, Kansas, and I learned that another young man had been shot just outside their house. Apparently he had been arguing with someone in the car next to his, and that person pulled out a gun and left him for dead.

Maybe I'm just naive. I don't know. I just don't understand why there is such a lack of respect for human life.

People don't even think about the consequences anymore. True, when I was younger I would get mad at someone and do something to get back at him or her, but that never included leaving that person to die in the street. If anyone out there can explain why all of this is happening, I would like to hear your theory. It's beyond my reasoning.

Thank you,
Jeff Hershberger

Greek fundraiser collects $5,000

Heidi Evert

Alpha Gamma Rho and Pi Kappa Alpha raised $5,000 for Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan at their 7th annual Beach Bash last weekend.

Beach Bash was a two-day event that started Friday with a kickoff party and ended Saturday with games and a Beauty and the Beast contest.

The kickoff party was at Bombers in Aggieville where there was a two-on-two volleyball game. There was also a sign-in party for the participating greek houses.

The houses met Saturday at Tuttle Creek State Park to play beach volleyball, canoe races, innertube races, horseshoes, tug-o-war, and an obstacle course.

Brett Carlgren, philanthropy chair for Pi Kappa Alpha, estimated there were about 1,500 people at the beach.

Sigma Kappa's Julianne Brock said despite the hot sun, she was having a great time.

"It's a great way to get everybody together and to meet new people. It's awesome that we do this for Big Brothers and Big Sisters," she said.

Saturday night everyone returned to Bombers for the Beauty and the Beast contest. The contestants modeled evening wear, casual wear and swimsuits.

Paul Friedrichs, philanthropy chair for Alpha Gamma Rho, said this year's bash was probably the most successful.

"This is probably one of our biggest years ever for Beach Bash. It's one of the biggest philanthropy events on the K-State campus," he said.

Rachal Krueger from Alpha Xi Delta said she also thought the bash was successful and a fun way to get people involved in raising money for Big Brother and Big Sisters.

"I think it's a great cause, and I think that it was a fun idea to promote this great cause," she said.

Lunch brings groups together

Cori Cornelison
staff writer

Visiting one of the not-so-typical lunch groups in the K-State Student Union Stateroom could definitely sooth your appetite or be a change in your diet.

One lunch group of about 30 people, who often refer to themselves as the "round table," meet in the Stateroom from noon to about 2 p.m. each day.

"This is what we call stammtisch," Vernon Deines, professor of regional and community planning, said. "We just don't have any beer."

Stammtisch is a German word meaning a place where people meet every night for a glass of beer.

Larry Erickson, professor of chemical engineering, said the round table is a friendly group you can learn from.

"I go home at night, and my wife asks me what I'd learned at lunch today," he said.

Deines said the group often talks about political dialogue, jokes and University gossip, but there is no set topic.

Deines said the common thread of the group is most of them served on Faculty Senate.

"It's sort of like TGIF, but it's at noon everyday," he said.

The round-table lunch group is a diverse group with differentiating opinions, Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages, said.

Although Max Miller, retired Manhattan resident, said, "Most of them are whining liberals."

Thaddeus Cowan, professor in psychology, said sometimes the group is privileged to have President Jon Wefald stop by their table and give them a lecture.

Erickson said everyone is welcome to sit with the group, but sometimes the table gets full and it's hard to squeeze people in.

Most of the time it's like musical chairs, people come and go, said Anneliese Snyder, executive director of Smith Scholars program.

"Table No. 2," an annex of the round table, has been meeting since about 1972 , Dick Elkins, director of admissions, said.

Although Robert Snell, professor of civil engineering, said he wasn't at K-State in '72, but will agree with Elkins.

Like the round table, table No. 2 is full of humor.

When asked to describe the differences between the round table and table No. 2, Bill Feyerharm, dean of arts and sciences, said they regard themselves as the intellectuals.

Jim Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said the group has one function — to have a good time.

"We talk about problems, we just don't solve any," he said.

Capt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police said if any fights break out at the table, he gets to settle them.

Snell said that if any fights break out, he leaves.

JEEP

Carter, who is also a Delt, was not there when the confrontation started.

Carter said he had just returned to his fraternity house from the party.

"About then, some guys came in and said there were guys trying to start trouble," he said.

Carter said he walked up to the jeep and the guys in the jeep were yelling .

"All I said was 'excuse me' and this fist just popped me in the mouth," Carter said.

Carter said he jumped up on the back of the jeep.

"The driver slammed it into reverse for about five feet, and then spun out," he said.

Carter said the top of his right foot and both of his shins were cut from being under the jeep.

"I got drug under the jeep," Carter said. "Everyone is joking that the best way for me to identify the jeep is to look at mufflers," he said.

Carter said it all happened fast.

"I don't remember much more than this, but I remember being under the jeep," he said.

The jeep was an older one with bigger tires and perhaps a lift kit, according to Aidi and Carter's description.

Aidi said he thought the guys were just looking for trouble.

"They were definitely students, and there were about six of them in the jeep," Carter said.

Carter said he didn't know why the guys were yelling at them, but he said he heard the same guys were messing with another fraternity earlier in the night.

The Riley County Police Department investigator was unavailable for comment about the case, but the report will be released Monday morning.

Defensive end Nyle Wiren spikes Iowa State quarterback Todd Doxzen in last season's matchup. Wiren is one of three starters returning to the Wildcat defenisve line.

Experience returns on defensive line

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

The Wildcat offense may see some significant changes this season. Not so the defense.

K-State returns eight starters from a squad that ranked 8th in the nation in scoring defense last season, allowing only 14.2 points per game. Three of those returners are on the line.

"We had a great defense last year and we should be as good, if not better, this year,"senior end Matt McEwen said.

The line will be anchored by all-American senior tackle Tim Colston. Colston, 6-foot 1-inch, 275 pounds, recorded 91 tackles last year, 64 solo. He also led the Cats and ranked third in the Big 8 with eight sacks and six tackles for loss, earning third-team all-American honors.

The only returning defensive all-American in the conference, Colston is the front-runner for Big 8 Defensive Player of the Year honors. Colston has been named a preseason first-team all-American by Athlon Sports and was tabbed the second best defensive tackle in the country by the Sporting News.

Ray Eagle, 6' 2", 275 pounds, will start at the other tackle after earning significant playing time last year behind starter Darrell Harbert. Eagle had 18 tackles last season, eight unassisted, and one sack.

Eagle's backup will likely be junior Andrew Timmons, moving from the end position. Timmons, 6' 3", 275 pounds, played exceptionally as a freshman in 1992 but missed the '93 and '94 seasons due to injury and personal reasons.

At the ends, both starters and the top backup return from last year.

Junior Nyle Wiren, 6' 1", 275 pounds, was chosen as a first-team all-conference selection by the Big 8 coaches last year as a sophomore after recording 67 tackles, 40 unassisted, and seven sacks. Wiren has been named the 13th best defensive end in the nation by the Sporting News.

Senior Dirk Ochs, a two-year starter, returns at the other tackle. Ochs, 6' 4", 250 pounds, had 47 tackles on the season last year, 26 unassisted, and five sacks.

McEwen, 6' 4", 240 pounds, will likely be the first end off the bench. McEwen recorded 27 tackles, 17 solo, and three sacks last year.

Smith survives cut with Chiefs

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hometown hero J. J. Smith survived the cut, fullback James Saxon was released, and safety Ronnie Lott was put on the injured-reserve list Sunday as the Kansas City Chiefs reduced their roster to the 53-man limit.

Smith, a Raytown, Mo., South High School and K-State product, was a fan favorite in Kansas City during the preseason. Smith was not drafted, signing with the Chiefs as a free agent.

Smith holds the all-time rushing record at K-State with 2,210 regular season career yards, and became only the fourth player in school history to rush for more than 1,000 yards in a season, racking up 1,073 as a senior.

Also cut were rookie center Tim Barndt and linebackers Ron Childs and Rick Hamilton. Tight end Tracy Greene was traded to Pittsburgh and Lindsay Knapp was traded to Green Bay, both for an undisclosed 1996 draft pick, the club announced Sunday.

Lott, in his 15th year, was signed as an unrestricted free agent in the off-season. He has been voted to 10 NFL Pro Bowls but suffered a fractured fibula in a preseason game. By being placed on injured reserve, Lott can't play for the Chiefs this year, but when he recovers can be waived and then would be eligible to sign with another team, the club said.

J. J. Smith evades the Rice University defense. Smith was one of 53 players to make the final cut with the Kansas City Chiefs.

Saxon was signed as an unrestricted free agent. He was with the Chiefs his first four years in the league and spent the last three years with Miami. He caught 27 passes for the Dolphins last year.

Barndt, a sixth-round draft choice this year, was a defensive lineman in college. Childs was a rookie from Washington State.

Hamilton was signed as a free agent last year after two years with Washington and played in two games for the Chiefs in 1994.

Greene was a seventh-round draft pick by the Chiefs in 1994 and caught six passes in seven games, while Knapp was a fifth-round draft choice in 1993.

Who will be the national champs: The debate rages on

With no time on the clock, Scott Dreisbach's fourth down pass floated perfectly through the end zone to receiver Mercury Hayes.

Touchdown. Michigan wins 18-17 over Virginia.

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

The Pigskin Classic Saturday marked the official start of college football season, along with the inevitable last-second passes, goal-line stands, wide-right field goals and touchdown returns that make the game so exciting.

The problem, of course, is that by the end of the season, what happens off the field has generated more excitement as the game itself.

I'm not talking about fights or academic troubles or anything else related to the players, though those do sometimes steal the limelight.

I'm talking about the coaches and sports writers who create the news by participating in the national polls.

Unlike every other college sport in the civilized world, NCAA Division I-A football does not select a national champion.

Oh, we dub national champions every year. In fact, on several occasions, we've chosen more than one team to play the role of national champion.

Washington and Miami shared the crown following the 1991 season, with the press voting for the Hurricanes and the coaches siding with the Huskies.

But no one can give you a reason why, nor can they determine which was the better team.

Last year, Penn State led Nebraska in the polls for most of the early season. But when the Nittany Lion third-string allowed Indiana a late-game surge, artificially making the game seem closer than it really was, the voters turned to the Cornhuskers.

The rest is history.

The problem with allowing any group of voters to choose a national champion is that one can never be sure that they are right.

Does an undefeated season warrant consideration when the caliber of opponents is relatively weak? It was enough to earn Brigham Young and Georgia Tech at least a share of the title in the last ten years.

Should strength of schedule be considered? One would think so. After all, Florida State edged Notre Dame after the Fighting Irish lost to Boston College — even though Notre Dame won in head-to-head competition.

And does a loss early in the season mean less than a late loss? They both look the same in the record book. But a September loss allows a team time to recover in the conference season and rise in the polls. A late loss is the kiss of death in the national championship race.

And why can't the coaches vote for teams on probation. Isn't an undefeated Auburn, with big wins over Alabama and Mississippi State, likely to be the best team in the nation?

> "And why can't the coaches vote for a team on probation? Isn't an undefeated Auburn, with big wins over Alabama and Mississippi State, likely to be the best team in the nation?"

Perhaps the most ridiculous phenomenon in the whole equation is the proliferation of the pre-season football guide, each with its own all-American teams, Top 25 list and other assorted predictions for the coming year. And each with its own formula for determining such things.

Not that any of this foolishness has stopped me from buying these publications. In fact, I've already bought eight of them, and I haven't even gotten Sports Illustrated.

But it has made me more aware of the methodology used to choose a top team.

Southern Cal will win it all because of its potent offense. Florida State will win it all because of its stifling defense.

Texas A&M plays in such a patsy conference that they are virtually assured an undefeated season and, consequently, the championship. Texas A&M plays in such a patsy conference that they cannot be legitimately considered for the crown, regardless of their record.

Add Nebraska, Florida, Auburn and Penn State to the mix, and you'll find no fewer than seven teams ranked at the top by someone claiming to be an expert.

I'm not an exert. But I have read every shred of paper with a college football logo on it, and I know who plays whom, where and when. So here's a list of ten teams that will be in the running when bowl time comes.

Keep in mind, this is not a Top 10 list, nor is it indicative of how I think the final polls will rank these teams. Since many play each other, or will in bowl games, they're all likely to beat each other out of the polls.

Alabama — The Tide should have smooth sailing until their annual season-ending brawl with Auburn. The winner should play in the Southeastern Conference championship.

Auburn — Both Florida and Alabama visit, but the Tigers will probably have to play Florida again in the SEC championship.

Florida — The Gators avoid 'Bama in the regular season, but travel to Auburn and close the season hosting Florida State. Then there's the SEC championship.

Florida State — Winning the Atlantic Coast Conference shouldn't be tough, and Miami visits Tallahassee this year, but the road trip to Florida may be tricky.

Kansas State — This isn't school pride lip service. With a non-conference schedule Manhattan High could win against Colorado and Oklahoma visiting. An upset in Lincoln could mean an undefeated season and a shot at the title.

Nebraska — Another soft non-conference slate, and K-State and Oklahoma visit, the Huskers will be favorites to repeat in the Big 8, and as national champs.

Notre Dame — Despite playing every available service academy to guarantee wins (Hey, does the Coast Guard have a team?), road trips to Washington and Ohio State will probably prevent the Irish from taking the title.

Penn State — With Michigan, Ohio State, and Wisconsin visiting Happy Valley this year, count on the Nittany Lions to 1) go undefeated, 2) play in the Rose Bowl, 3) get snubbed by the pollsters.

Southern Cal — Maybe the best team in the country, but Washington, Arizona, and Notre Dame are all on the road, and Penn State awaits on Jan. 1. One stumble will kill the Trojan's shot at the crown.

Texas A&M — If the Aggies beat Colorado in September, they'll finish the regular season perfectly. But a decayed Southwest Conference will make winning their bowl game a necessity.

Tomorrow, Shane McCormick reflects on the Kansas City Chiefs' upcoming season.

REVIEW

'Circle' true to its author, low in cheese

Claudette Riley
staff writer

After seeing the "Circle of Friends" movie poster proclaiming "Some dreams DO come true," which shows two lovers in a visual lock, you might safely guess the movie notches fairly high on the meter o' cheese.

However, beyond the plot of unattainable love (with the lingering promise of a happy ending) emerges a movie with enough bite to evoke tears and the nervous laughter of recognition.

Stripping away the intricate layers of Maeve Binchy's novel, "Circle of Friends," screenwriter Andrew Davis dismisses the periphery characters and centers on a gang of realistic students struggling to collate traditional Catholic upbringings with sexual curiosity.

Employing the tools of guilt, shame and fear, the world of Ireland in 1957 frames three childhood friends wrestling with their own sexual coming of age as they leave their village of Knockglen for university life in nearby Dublin.

Circle of Friends
out of a possible 5 stars

Staying true to Binchy's characterization, Davis shows Nan Mahon (Saffron Burrows) as the daughter of a drunkard who, utilizing a ravishing figure and schooling herself in societal politics, schemes to spring-board herself into a place of status.

Eve Malone (Geraldine O'Rawe) directs honesty as the saucy-mouthed orphaned offspring of strangled roots, who prefers banter and matching wits over indulging her boyfriends requests.

Resting with her lifelong friend, the big, soft Benny Hogan (Minnie Driver), is the depth and generous heart of the film. A relative newcomer, Driver proves a welcome reservoir of authenticity, stealing each scene with the same sincerity and charming cleverness that finally wins Benny the heart of the dashing lead.

Standing between her and the handsome Jack Foley (Chris O'Donnell) is the smothering adoration of parents who match her with the lizard-skinned Sean Walsh (Colin Firth). It is through proving she has no intentions to marry that slimy half-wit for the sake of the family business, that the most hilarious situations emerge.

O'Donnell as Foley, the handsome doctor's son and star rugby player, effects a believable brogue that will help you forget his turn in "Batman Forever," though his tenderness with Benny is reminiscent of the awkward but earnest student from "Scent of A Woman."

Feeling the unyielding obligations of her family pulling her back to Knockglen, they are separated for a time. As he navigates through the all too human obstacles of an ambitious man with every advantage, your heart (like Benny's) will both adore and detest him.

If you're a student of human emotion and want the full texture of this first blush of romance and the cutting realism that follows, Binchy's novel is available in paperback. The movie, loyal to Binchy's insights about unearthing your identity and the painful honesty of friendship, is a delightful quest to be truly free to love the man you want.

Small audience hurts DB92's 1995 Welcome Back Concert

Scott Allen Miller
contributing writer

Welcome back, everybody. Hey! Where is everybody?

The DB92 Welcome Back Concert was held in City Park yesterday but you probably weren't there, were you?

Well, sure it was hot outside. Sure, you probably were studying because finals are only three and a half months away. But if you did drag yourself to City Park on Sunday you probably had a good time.

KSDB-91.9 FM, with help from Game Guy and Subway, put on a show that featured local talent as well as music from Lawrence and even Cedar Falls, Iowa.

The show kicked off around 2 p.m. or so with the local instrumental R&B duo Seven. Hardly anyone was around to hear the George Benson-tinged music of this talented pair.

Seven, with its sequencer and drum machine in tow, is an ideal act for the local clubs where no one pays much attention to the music, but in a daytime outdoor concert setting it doesn't seem to come across as well.

Ten Thumb took the stage after Seven. It played its progressive grunge — not exactly an ideal wedding reception band. But the Ten Thumb crowd gave a decent response throughout the set.

Lawrence's Action Man took the stage after a lengthy delay. This band, rumored to be the next big thing out of Lawrence, played a solid set of rural rock, mixing perhaps the best parts of Weezer with a little of the Truck Stop Love sound into its twangy stew.

Action Man drummer Randy Fitzgerald said the band's first album should be in stores around October or so. Watch for it.

By this time in the show everyone was noticing how crummy the sound system was. The mix was pretty good but the soundman was driving the PA amplifier too hard, resulting in terrible screeches whenever the bands' volume would peak.

This was the same soundman who showed up two hours late for Truck Stop Love's most recent show at Club Berlin.

Seven played once again after Action Man, this time to a crowd that had swelled for the upcoming Sufferbus set. (The fact that the sun was setting didn't hurt attendance either.)

It was well past 6 p.m. when Sufferbus came on stage. This group of local heroes received enthusiastic applause from the crowd, which by then was peaking at around 250 people.

Sound problems continued for Sufferbus. While it didn't have the screeching PA overloading that other bands did, it did complain that it had poor stage monitors. Without monitors, band members have a terrible time hearing themselves sing and play.

Even so, Sufferbus did not disappoint. It played new songs ("Wanderlust", "Beautiful", and "Oh, Baby") as well as older favorites. Guitarist and vocalist Mitchell Leggs dedicated the song "Half a Mind", a great tune, to a group of people who left the area.

By the time Cedar Falls, Iowa, natives House of Large Sizes took the stage, it was after 7 p.m. The people who stuck around were in for a treat.

HOLS brought a wild mix of off-kilter meters and changing tempos to Manhattan.

Tiny Barb Schilf's innocent-looking pigtails were soon swinging in the ether as her Precision Bass overdrove her amp and she pogosticked around the stage.

Dave Deibler did most of the singing, when he wasn't hopping about, singing about the kind of goofy things you'd expect an observant Iowan to write about: gun-happy property owners, generations in conflict and his older brother.

"I basically write these songs while my dad is out mowing the lawn," Deibler joked after the show, wiping the sweat he'd worked up off his face.

The neo-hippies who had been grooving in the pit during the Sufferbus set were left to stand in miscomprehension of the twisting, rough rhythms of HOLS.

The band, which has been together for nine years, is in pre-production for the follow-up to its latest album "My Ass-Kicking Life."

The band's scheduled to return to Manhattan to play at Berlin within the next few weeks.

If you missed HOLS this time, don't miss it again. The band is funny, plays extremely tightly, and is great to watch.

One last question remains. Where was everyone?

DB92 put on a great show, and few people showed up.

Tsk, tsk, tsk.

Manhattan citizens file suit to stop library expansion, saying they are trying to # preserve historical integrity

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Manhattan Public Library's neighbors have filed suit against the city for violating its own zoning laws in the library expansion plan.

Breta Bloomberg-Ellis and two of her Houston Street neighbors filed the suit Aug. 22, 1994. With the legal action pending, the library-expansion construction has been put on hold.

Bloomberg-Ellis, who lives at 600 Houston St., and her neighbors are fighting what they claim are exceptions to the rules in an effort to preserve the historic integrity of the neighborhood.

Before the library-construction project was stalled, two homes in the 600 block of Houston Street were moved to accommodate the $2.7-million library expansion plan approved by the city commission March 8, 1994.

The historic J.A. Koller house used to be two houses down from Bloomberg-Ellis, who lives in the old Episcopal Church Rectory.

Koller owned a paint and wall paper business around the turn of the century. Koller and his wife were important members of the community and the First Christian Church. The church's fellowship hall is named for them.

Efforts to preserve the Koller house failed, and it was moved to a location outside of St. Marys. The other property was moved a year ago to a location on east U.S. Highway 24 near the sale barn.

Bloomberg-Ellis said she thought it was not very cost effective to spend thousands of dollars to move a house to make room for seven parking places.

"To begin with, it was going to be demolished," Bloomberg-Ellis said.

Bloomberg-Ellis and her neighbors united to try and get the house put on the historic registry. Her house and the house between hers and the Koller home were put on the registry Aug. 20, 1994.

The Koller house was not put on the registry of historical homes.

"There was so much controversy surrounding the house," Bloomberg-Ellis said. "Plus there was not owner consent. They rely heavily on that."

Starting in 1993, there were a series of public meetings for residents to express views on the library project.

Fred Atchison, library director, said the residents said they were against using the property for any purpose other than a residence.

The two homes were moved to make room for the expanded parking lot, Bloomberg-Ellis said.

Homeowners are concerned about the paving of what was once the yard around one of Manhattan's historic homes.

"The integrity of our neighborhood is being affected," Bloomberg-Ellis said.

Now the Ellises and their neighbors allege the library plans violate city zoning laws.

One alleged violation of the zoning law is a height exception made for the library expansion.

According to city zoning regulations, no building may be built at a height of more than 30 feet, but the three-story addition to the library calls for a 39-foot-tall building, Bloomberg-Ellis said.

St. Paul's Episcopal Church was originally against construction until the library moved the proposed expansion away from the stained glass window in the west end of the church.

The height of the building would have blocked the window, but now the area in front of the window will be green space.

The second alleged violation is of the city's varied

Expansion plans remain on hold

The Manhattan Public Library's plans for expansion have been on hold for more than a year. The city has been granted acceptions to two main zoning laws and neighbors are upset. Local residents argue the expansion disturbs the historic integrity of the neighborhood. This is how the library will look if the expansion plans are carried out.

▶ TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIP FOUNDATION

Award recipients set examples

Rebecca Schulz
staff writer

K-State is the mecca for the Truman Scholar, the executive secretary of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation said during a visit to campus Monday.

"I'm serious. I'm dead serious," Louis Blair said. "I just came to see this wonderful place."

Students who win Truman Scholarships at K-State are hard to pick out of the crowd, said Blair, who is in charge of the federal agency that selects the Truman Scholarships.

Scholarship recipients at K-State are not the typical student body president or cheerleader. K-State Truman Scholars are proportionately non-traditional students, he said.

Blair said he likes to use K-State as a model for other universities.

"The University really puts a priority on helping students. K-State puts scholarships in a much better perspective," Blair said.

Other universities come to K-State to learn from its Truman Scholarship success, Nancy Twiss, special assistant to the Provost for Scholarships, said.

"When the committee gets the applications, they all say 'I want to read the K-State files. They're very nicely done. They're very interesting,'" Blair said.

Each year the Truman Foundation awards 75-85 scholarships screened from 1,000 applications, which are received from 700 colleges.

The Foundation has tried to design the Truman Scholarship as a developmental process to get applicants thinking about their life after college, Blair said.

Michelle Munson, senior in electrical engineering and physics, said although she didn't win the Truman Scholarship, the application process was valuable.

"The fact that you have to think about what you want to do with your life. It teaches you to think about how your life fits into society and how you contribute to society," Munson said.

▶ GRADUATION

Overflow prompts split ceremonies

Chris May
staff writer

The increasing number of K-State graduates has forced the University to separate this year's fall graduation ceremonies.

More than 900 graduates and about 9,000 guests are expected at December's commencement.

Ceremonies will cater to the audience because each will be organized at different times and places, according to each college.

"They will be able to see their graduates better, there won't be as many cars and the ceremonies are managed by the colleges so it should be much nicer," Beth Unger, vice provost, said.

Previously, all students graduated during one ceremony at Bramlage Coliseum.

"Last year, we had an overflow of people," Unger said.

Television viewing was provided for the overflow of audience in the halls at Bramlage, she said.

Although each college will have individual ceremonies, the College of Architecture will have a special ceremony, Unger said.

"There is only one graduate this semester and they want to honor that graduate in a special way, " she said.

All of the graduation ceremonies are expected to be shorter this year because of the individual ceremonies, Unger said.

Mark Seim, senior in mechanical engineering, said he wasn't aware of the changes.

But Seim said he thinks the separate ceremonies are a good idea because he won't have to sit in Bramlage for a long time.

The ceremony is a minor part of graduation, Jeff Loucks, senior in mechanical engineering, said.

Graduation ceremonies

The Graduate School will have its ceremony at 2 p.m., Dec. 8 in McCain Auditorium. The following colleges will have commencement Dec. 9:

| College | Time |
|---|---|
| Arts and Sciences | 9 a.m. |
| Agriculture and Education | 11 a.m. |
| Engineering and Technology | 1:30 p.m. |
| Human Ecology | 3:30 p.m. |
| Business | 3:30 p.m. |

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

"Getting a degree and getting out is the important thing," he said.

Denise Gurtiza, senior in accounting, said she almost missed seeing her friend receive a diploma at last year's fall commencement because of the number of people graduating.

"There were over a thousand people graduating last year," Gurtiza said.

Because of the increasing number of graduates, spring ceremonies are also expected to change slightly but plans have not been finalized, Unger said.

MISS TEEN USA WITHDRAWS FROM K-STATE DUE TO HECTIC SCHEDULE

Miss Teen USA Keylee Sanders withdrew from K-State and moved out of Van Zile Hall Monday morning, said Margaret Sanders, Keylee Sanders' mother.

"It was a really difficult decision for Keylee. But we just pretty much insisted," Margaret Sanders said, adding that the hectic schedule Keylee Sanders was supposed to keep would have stifled her scholastic efforts.

Margaret Sanders said Keylee Sanders will return to K-State next semester and work toward her degree in fashion merchandising and mass communications.

Keylee Sanders became the first-ever Kansas contestant to bring home the title of Miss Teen USA on Aug. 15. Although initially hesitant to attend college because of her responsibilities as Miss Teen USA, Keylee Sanders said she thought she could handle the 13-hour class schedule.

"They've had a lot of requests from her," said Margaret Sanders. "She has so many appearances — so many things scheduled back-to-back."

She said the unpredictable schedule Keylee Sanders has would cause her to miss a lot of school. Since her daughter strives for excellence in everything she does, she said, this would pose too large an obstacle for her.

Next week Keylee Sanders is off to New York for a Seventeen magazine photo shoot and a couple of appearances, said Margaret Sanders.

"She can't wait to get back," Margaret Sanders said. "She loves (K-State)."

HIT-AND-RUN INVESTIGATION TURNS UP NO NEW LEADS FOR POLICE

Riley County Police Department Sergeant Hank Nelson said there were no new leads in the hit-and-run case.

The hit and run involving Thamer Aidi and Tim Carter, both of 1001 Sunset Ave., happened at 11:50 p.m. Aug. 25.

The RCPD officer report filed today said one jeep fitting the description given by eyewitnesses did not check out to be involved.

The report also said another lead was being checked out at the present time.

Nelson said if the driver knew he was hitting the individuals involved, it would be no longer considered an accident. It would then be considered assault and battery.

"If it was an accident, then the driver is wanted on a leaving the scene of an accident charge," he said.

The RCPD report said there was a baseball cap found at the scene of the accident, and it is thought to belong to the driver or someone in the jeep.

"Even though we have nothing new at this time, we definitely plan on following up on this case," Nelson said.

STUDENT DIES FROM HEART PROBLEMS; MEMORIAL SERVICE PLANNED

Friends and loved ones are invited to attend a memorial service honoring Nicholas Goedeker at 8:30 p.m. tonight in Derby 134.

Goedeker, freshman in architecture, died of heart arrhythmia at 3 p.m. Sunday at Memorial Hospital.

Aaron Truax, resident assistant for the seventh floor, responded and tried to resuscitate Goedeker, who collapsed in his room at 702 Haymaker about 12:30 a.m. Sunday and did not regain consciousness.

"He was here for such a short amount of time, but every time I interacted with him, he was very casual, laid-back and calm," Truax said.

"I've learned a lot of stuff about him since this happened, just by talking to his father. He really enjoyed golfing and said that once he got settled in here, he was going to look for a golfing partner."

A meeting was held on the seventh floor of Haymaker at 8 p.m., Sunday and at 9 p.m. on the other floors. Members of the dean of student life's office, University Counseling Services, clergymen and hall residents attended.

"We were there to share information and resources," Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, said.

Father Brad Sterrett of St. Isidores Chapel, where Goedeker had been a member since arriving here, held vigil with family and friends Sunday at Memorial Hospital.

"His parents were just completely baffled. They had talked to him on Saturday afternoon and said he was feeling great and was excited about K-State and getting involved in numerous organizations on campus," Sterrett said.

"His parents told me he was very big hearted and just a very nice guy who would be deeply missed by family and friends from back home."

Funeral arrangements are pending for early this week at J.L. Ziegenhein and Sons in St. Louis, Mo.

The philosophy behind the punches

Cori Cornelison

An international referee and national executive director of the United States Taekwondo Union was in Manhattan Saturday.

Robert Fujimura, a fifth-degree black belt, was at the the grand opening celebration at the Manhattan Academy of Taekwondo in Westloop.

According to the U.S. Taekwondo Fact Book, Taekwondo is a martial art that teaches people, regardless of age or sex, different techniques for defense and offense without the use of weapons.

Taekwondo was introduced to the United States in the 1950s from Korea.

Fujimura said prior to practicing Taekwondo, he studied Judo in the '60s.

He said he has been practicing Taekwondo for about 20 years.

"When I got involved with Taekwondo, it wasn't really to defend myself, but it was for the mental discipline and the beauty of it," he said.

People who practice Taekwondo have different reasons for beginning the sport, Fujimura said.

He said there are about 4.5 million people who do it for recreation and about 40,000 people are at the competitive level.

He said understanding philosophy is a big part in Taekwondo.

"If you're just learning punching that's not good enough, you have to learn philosophy also," Fujimura said.

According to the fact book, philosophy helps a person practice the art of self perfection and understand the virtue of human life.

Age plays a small factor in when someone should begin or end the sport, Fujimura said.

He said he knows a person who received her black belt at 89.

Fujimura has been involved with the USTU since 1988.

Prior to that, he was a referee in 1987 at the Pan-American games.

Since his involvement with the USTU, Fujimura has been to the 1991 Pan-American games in Cuba and the Olympic games in Barcelona in 1992 as a representative of the USTU. Taekwondo will become an Olympic medal sport in 2000.

This year, he went to Argentina as the U.S. team leader for karate and executive director for the USTU.

He said he is preparing for the world championship, which will be in the Philippines the second week of November.

Center to assist student athletes in academics

■ Facility plans in final stages of development

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

Groundbreaking is scheduled for a $1-million academic learning center at the Vanier Football Complex within the next few weeks.

"We are finishing the final stages of the plans," Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said.

"A contractor has been selected, and optimistically, we hope to break ground in early September," he said.

The 9,000-square-foot facility will be fully funded by private donations, Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director, said.

The center will be added to the north side of the football locker room at Vanier and will serve 285 to 310 student athletes, who are now served from five different locations on campus.

"Academics must come first," Switzer said.

"Some student athletes may put athletics first. We advise them on what their role is," he said.

"If they want to graduate, they will," Switzer said.

Although other students work, a regular job doesn't require the same energy level as competing in NCAA Division I athletics, Switzer said.

A student athlete must make a tremendous commitment to succeed both academically and athletically.

"In most cases, athletes must make the transition from being a star on their high-school team to taking a backseat role," Switzer said.

"They must also make the transition from high school to college academically," Switzer said.

Switzer said he has an optimistic goal of graduating 100 percent of the student athletes who come to K-State.

"The academic learning center is a continuation of growth and expansion of the athletic department, and we're excited about it," said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

Switzer said he had hoped the facility would be ready by the beginning of this academic year, but there were delays.

"The Board of Regents had to approve the project and there had to be an adjustment of space," Switzer said.

Rain also delayed the completion of other projects that had to be finished before another one could be undertaken.

City neighborhood struggles in a pointless fight

The Ellises and their neighbors are fighting for an unattainable prize.

Breta Bloomberg-Ellis and her neighbors have filed a lawsuit to prevent the Manhattan Public Library expansion from proceeding.

The Ellises and their neighbors are fighting for an unattainable prize.

The group filed the lawsuit to preserve its neighborhood and keep the historic J.A. Koller house in the neighborhood from being moved to make way for the library project.

The house has already been sold and moved from the neighborhood.

Whether an empty lot where the house once stood will be paved for a parking lot or not makes no difference.

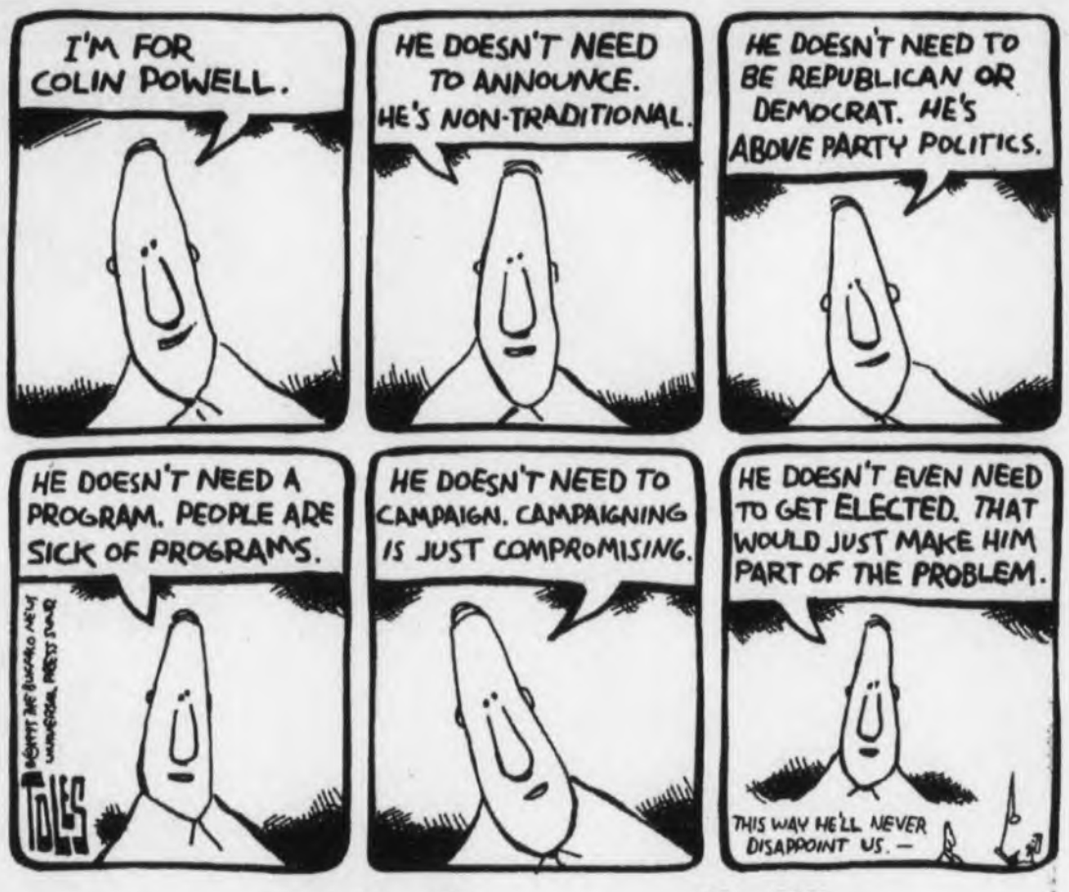
The damage to the neighborhood has already been done.

The Koller house has been moved, and what is done with the empty lot has little bearing on the continued preservation of the neighborhood.

This lawsuit is only delaying the library construction from beginning.

Meanwhile, the community is losing.

The city has already designated $2.7 million for the project. That amount cannot be increased.



As time passes, inflation is slowly driving the price of construction up and reducing what the library will be able to do with its money.

The Ellises and their neighbors should be commended for their efforts to save the Koller house and preserve Manhattan history.

However, the present and future needs of the public in this case have overridden the need to preserve the past. These efforts could be directed elsewhere.

An end to this lawsuit would be in the best interest to all parties involved. Prolonging the case will only mean more loses for all involved.

toles

America leans right

Many people died when the bomb destroyed the Oklahoma City Federal Building, and that's very bad. The consequences of the explosion, however, may have farther-reaching, subtle consequences that turn out to be even worse in the long term.

Two things are happening in the wake of the explosion. First, the entire elected government has put a major push on the Anti-Terrorism Bill. Second, membership in right-wing paramilitary groups has increased dramatically.

This latter fact can be partly explained away as the result of a whole bunch of adolescent (and adolescent-minded) right-wing gun freaks, who were bound to get excited by any big explosion.

But I think it goes deeper than this. I think that the increased backing of militia-type groups is a reaction to a disturbing trend in public policy, a trend that is made much worse by the Anti-Terrorism Bill.

This bill, in my opinion, seriously infringes on rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, by granting expanded wire-tap and search-and-seizure powers to the FBI for any investigation of terrorist activity.

COLUMN
JASON HAMILTON

I'm not the only one who thinks this, either. The bill was actually going into committee a few days before the bombing, and Congress members in both parties were about to change it to make it more constitutional.

Days later, however, when the explosion was on every news program in the country, these changes were forgotten.

I know several people who think, "Screw the Bill of Rights! The FBI should have all the power it needs to keep us safe from terrorism!"

I, however, am unwilling to trust random elected officials to come up with an appropriate definition of terrorism.

One day this summer, for several hours the bill defined terrorism as any crime involving the use of a handgun.

This would make shooting at squirrels in your backyard (if you live within city limits) a terroristic activity, and you could be arrested and imprisoned more or less indefinitely without a warrant.

I think it is ironic, but not surprising, that the government is taking this approach. After all, it is exactly these reductions in personal freedom that the militia groups are partly reacting against. In this respect, the militia groups and I are in agreement.

After all, one of the problems with giving the government and police forces more power is that you never know when a majority (misguided and well intentioned or not) will decide to make your thing illegal, whether it's handguns, alcohol, cigarettes, God or modern Russian literature.

Or, to put it another way, it is dangerous to infringe on the Bill of Rights because it is the last insurance you have against being harassed by the government for being who you are.

On the other hand, I agree with the government's main concern: We simply cannot have people running around blowing up other people.

But the government and the militia groups are feeding off each other's reactions, responding with fear, anger and an unhealthy move to the right.

> "We simply cannot have people running around blowing up other people."

As a country, we've had our right-hand turn signal blinking furiously since Reagan took office. Our constitutional rights have already taken a beating from the war on drugs. This terrorism fiasco is taking us that much closer to exiting off the mainstream freeway.

For most people, this won't be a big deal in the short term.

But, when granting government and police forces more and more power over your life, you are not only putting your trust in the government of today. These same powers will be trusted by whoever happens to be in power in 20 years. Are you sure you trust them?

U.S. coddles evil regimes

Ever since I was very young I was exposed to propaganda about the United States. It wasn't my parent's fault, it was society as a whole.

I was taught that America was the land of the free, the good guys, the center of democracy that all other nations strived to be like. I believed that the Constitution provided us all with a fair system of government that allowed anyone with talent to be the best that they could be. I also believed that we were a beacon of light, drawing all good countries toward the freedom and equality that existed here.

I bought into this line crap so heavily that I was pleased to learn that, directly after my initial training in the United States Army, I would be sent to the Persian Gulf to battle Iraq in what has been called Operation Desert Storm. I went into battle on the front lines, knowing that an estimated 90 percent of my engineer company was expected to be casualties. All I could think of was what an honor it was to serve my country.

COLUMN
LACH FRANQUEMONT

I started to wake up after the 100 hours of battle were over. We hadn't been killed because many Iraqis surrendered. Still, there were many signs of what was wrong with the whole concept of war. I don't know what did it, but the fog from years of brainwashing started to clear.

Now I see the United States for what it really is: an evil empire that controls countries in a many devious ways. The only thing of importance is money.

To hell with the values expressed in the Declaration of Independence. The quality of life for the average person in this country means little to the business interest that really control things and as for the people in other countries, they mean less than zero.

Any policy decision they make can be sold to a public that goes through life with their eyes closed to the reality of the world.

One of the best cases of this is the United States's support of dictators. According to the Defense Information Institute, $70 billion went to 50 dictators worldwide during the 1980's. The 1990s has seen no decrease in this amount even though the cold war is over.

"Why?" you might ask. Well, the reason is very simple. The business interests have discovered that a dictator friendly to U.S. corporations is much better for business than a properly elected government. You see, governments elected by the people have a bad habit of wanting to increase the people's standard of living at the expense of the corporate profit margins.

This has been the way the United States has operated in Central and South America for a while. Although there are many cases of this, the worst has to be El Salvador. The DII reports that during the civil war there the United States provided over $1.7 billion in military aid to the dictatorial regime responsible for numerous human rights abuses and murders. One former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, Robert White (1978-81) said, "It is our toleration of military abuses that is in good part the reason for the reign of terror that has been inflicted on El Salvador over the last decade."

Perhaps the worst human rights abusers in the world is a U.S. ally located on the other side of the globe. A State Department report said that Indonesia has killed 200,000 East Timorese since 1975. This genocide has gone relatively unnoticed by the people in this country even though this year's State Department report says there has been no lessening in the level of killing and human rights abuses. The DII reports that over the last 10 years $1.6 billion in military aid has gone to Indonesia.

In 1991 Allen Nairn, a reporter for the New Yorker, was brutally beaten while covering a funeral in East Timor. Many East Timorese died on all sides of him.

Back in this country, when he asked the State Department why nothing was done about Indonesia they told him that East Timor was not important. What was important was the American business interest in the region.

This summer, Indonesia received the tacit go ahead from the U.S. when military aid was once again approved for them. In the Foreign Aid Appropriations bill HR 1060 $600,000 in military aid was given to Indonesia.

The East Timor Action Network reports that the bill's sponsor, U.S. Rep. Sonny Callahan, R-Ala., has plants in his district that are already contracted to make the motors for Indonesian helicopters.

Another major proponent of the bill, U.S. Rep. Robert Livingston, R-La., received significant campaign finance from mining companies with interest in Indonesia. Although several U.S. Representatives, including U.S. Rep. Nita Lowery, D-N.Y., made valiant tries to get the Indonesian aid dropped, big business won out in the end.

I didn't think I went to the Persian Gulf for oil but to defeat a dictator who was committing atrocities. It's becoming ever more clear, however, that United States policy makers only care about these things when money is involved. Not only is the U.S. not the defender of freedom and democracy, it might be just the opposite.

▶ ANTI-JACOBS

Editor,

Kevyn Jacobs is very sadly mistaken in his terming of abortion as "the good kill." Abortion is neither good nor therapeutic in any sense of the word. "Thou shall not kill" is not a qualified statement in the eyes of God. You don't have to be a Christian, or even religious, to understand common sense. Common sense will tell you that to deny a future is the gravest of evil.

Abortion is bad for all parties involved. The mother, the child and society are affected by abortion.

First of all, abortion is bad for the mother. Yes, I said mother. Aborting a child does not make you any less of a mother than carrying a child to term. A mother who aborts will never have the chance to hold her child in her arms or see it graduate from high school. She will be faced with the guilt over the life which she terminated. She will forever mark her due date with sorrow. Women many times feel suicidal, even incapable of love, after abortions. Is abortion good for women?

Abortion is not good for the child for obvious reasons; the child dies. This child will never have the chance to laugh, to love, to have a first kiss or even graduate from college. How blessed we are at K-State that we have been given these opportunities and how sad for those who have not.

Abortion is not good for society. When we abort, we have no idea of the potential of that child's life. A mother may be aborting one of society's great peacekeepers, poets, scientists or journalists. As a direct result of abortion, we may have lost cures for AIDS and cancers. We don't know the potential of a life and since we don't know, we have no right to destroy it.

Mr. Jacobs says that he does not believe in abortions as a means of birth control. Ninety-four percent of abortions are done for reasons other than rape, incest or to save the life of the mother.

In conclusion, Mr. Jacobs states that he doesn't see himself as anything but an animal. How sad it must be to feel you have no more worth than the food on your plate.

▶ JACOBS KUDOS

Editor,

My appreciation and thanks to Kevyn Jacobs for his column on Monday! I applaud his bravery for writing such a column in conservative Kansas. While I am sure he upset many people, I am very glad he had the guts to do it.

Kevyn makes a wonderful point. People must make choices in their lives, some of them incredibly difficult ones. Abortion is no different. It is a woman's fundamental right to have control over her body and her life, as well as to decide on her own how she feels about abortion.

Granted, the choice one person makes may not be right for another, while someone else may disagree completely. But the beauty of living in this country is that we are able to make these difficult choices ourselves; no one tells us what we can or can't do. Every woman has and deserves the right to consider abortion, and then choose or decide not to choose on her own.

▶ SGA MONEY MATTERS

Editor,

I am responding to the editorial entitled "Mismanaged Money" by Ben Clouse. I find it very interesting that the former SGA Treasurer would disagree with funding the Student Senate retreat, especially when last year was one of the highest-spending Senates on record. Mr. Clouse begins his argument by belittling newly-elected senators for lavishly spending money on an SGA retreat. I am glad to inform Mr. Clouse and the entire student body that every participant will be paying $10 to attend the retreat and that this year's retreat will cost less than the previous year. When you compare spending $2,181.04 last year to spending $1,792.50 this year, you will find that $388.54 will be saved in the process. Also, the allocation bill has not been adopted yet by Senate. This means senators and cabinet members may have to pay more than $10 to attend the retreat. I would encourage the entire student body to attend the Thursday night meeting to see how this financial matter is being dealt with.

Another disturbing statement was made concerning Student Body President Jeff Peterson. The president has no control over what happens on the Senate floor or what we allocate funds to, except by his veto power. There is no reason to pull the student body president into this financial matter. The legislative and executive branches are two separate entities. It is sad to see that sour grapes still exist over the student body presidential race. I will not tolerate the "us" and "them" mentality on Senate or in its affairs. It is unfair to the campus and to the students who are involved. Hopefully, people will keep this in mind for the future.

▶ Shortly after recording a message on their telephone voice mail, Carlstrom and Fisher get a laugh out of hearing their recorded voices on the phone.

Having a full class load, Fisher has to make her way through campus five days a week.

Karen Carlstrom (left), freshman in elementary education, shares a laugh with Michele Fisher (right), freshman in pre-med, after a meal at Derby Dining Center. Never having met before coming to K-State, Carlstrom and Fisher have adjusted to life as roommates.

When everything is new

Whether it's adjusting to living with someone, learning where the Union is or discovering the freedom of classes without attendance policies, a person's freshman year is a time of change. We followed two freshmen throughout the first week of classes and learned how they adjusted to college life and their perceptions of K-State.

Imagine being thrown into a new environment, living with a total stranger and having a pipe leak all over your residence hall room.

This scenario became a reality for freshmen Karen Carlstrom and Michele Fisher when they arrived in Manhattan to live in Moore Hall.

"The pipe was leaking, so they folded her (Fisher's) bed and put it on top of my bed when they fixed it," Carlstrom, freshman in elementary education, said. "Now, it's leaking again, so they'll probably have to come in and destroy our room again."

Fisher, freshman in in pre-medicine, said she and Carlstrom, who didn't know each other before they moved in together, get along well with each other.

"I didn't know my roommate, but it worked out great," Fisher said. "I think we're about the only ones that it's worked out great for, though."

Finding their classes was one of the things the two did Aug. 20 before classes started.

Fisher said a tour of campus enabled her to find her classes on the first day without a problem, but Carlstrom said she still had a little trouble.

"I felt really stupid. I had to ask where my first hall was," Carlstrom said. "Michele and I went to find our classes Sunday, but I still got turned around."

After attending her first round of classes, Fisher said she had expected them to be larger.

"I was really surprised," she said. "I thought that it would be different than my high school classes, but I had comparatively small and not large lecture classes.

"The big lecture class I did have was kind of more of what I was expecting. We got out in 20 minutes because the professor wasn't there, and I liked that better than high school."

Carlstrom said it will take some time for her to adjust to the big lecture classes.

"My recitation classes were really small, and my expository writing class was small, but my other classes were big," she said. "It's going to take some getting used to. My high school classes were small and pretty personal."

After she ran into a girl from her summer orientation group, Carlstrom said she was happy to see a familiar face in her classes.

"I met a girl from Wichita who I had met in orientation in one of my classes," she said. "She has the exact same schedule I have, so we plan to go to some of our classes together."

Figuring out the hours of operation for the Derby Food Center was another challenge the two had to overcome.

"Derby's OK. I had heard horror stories, but it's not as bad as those. I haven't figured out the different lines yet, though," Fisher said. "One said ham and pineapple pizza, but there was plain cheese pizza, so we were disappointed that we didn't go in that line.

"They also need to advertise their hours more."

Carlstrom said she agreed.

"We asked our R.A., and she helped us out with the times, so we made it, but I still worry that I'll miss a meal," Carlstrom said. "I'm still not exactly sure about the times."

After the first two days of class, Carlstrom said she was still trying to orient herself to K-State life.

"I'm a little overwhelmed," she said. "It's a new situation, and I don't feel organized and comfortable with everything yet."

Parking her car in Lot B-2 was something Fisher said she was trying to get used to.

"It's pretty far out there," she said. "I'm parking my car and walking everywhere — unless I have to go to Wal-Mart or the mall."

Fisher said she knows where Wal-Mart, Dillons, the mall and Blockbuster Video are, but said she still hasn't been many places in Manhattan.

"I haven't been to Tuttle Creek yet," she said. "I want to go there."

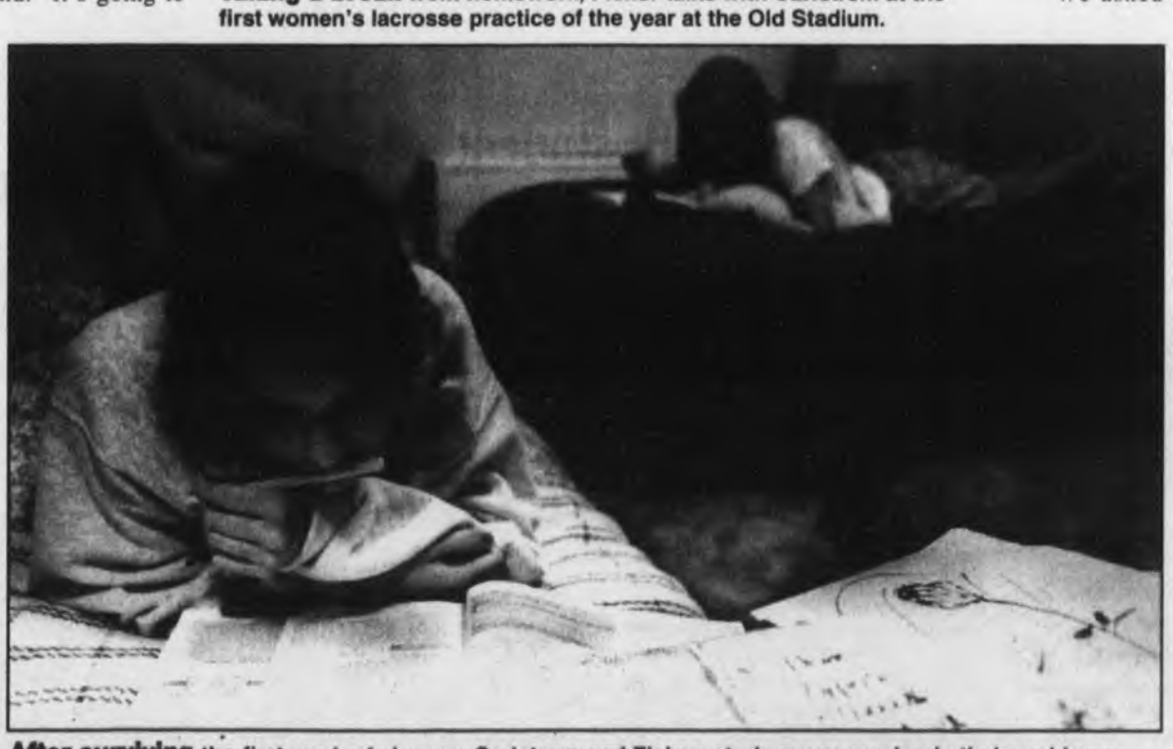
Exploring Aggieville is something Carlstrom said she wants to do.

"I'd like to see more of Aggieville," she said. "I've been to Varney's, Hardees and TCBY, but I'd like to see more and see what's down there."

On her third day of classes, Carlstrom said she was able to explore her surroundings on campus better because she didn't have her head in a map.

"I didn't get lost," she said. "Instead of picking a piece of paper out to see where I needed to go, I wrote my halls and room numbers on the back of my hand. It was a lot easier to get there, and I found some short cuts."

Carlstrom said she didn't find herself in any barricaded dead ends, because she followed the crowd through the campus construction,



"It's kind of a pain," she said. "I have to go the long way to a lot of my classes, but I've just been following the crowd through the congested areas by Lafene and the construction."

Fisher said she was able to get to know more people in her Spanish class the second time she attended it.

Chiefs unlikely to see success

As many of you know, there happen to be a lot of Kansas City Chiefs fans in this part of the country.

COLUMN

SHANE MCCORMICK

I am not one of them. My loyalty goes to the big D in Irving, Texas. But since I live in Kansas, I am basically force fed Chiefs games on Sunday.

Last year watching the Chiefs was much like watching a roller coaster ride. At times, the Chiefs looked like Super Bowl contenders. This type of play was seen in a 24-17 defeat of the the San Francisco 49ers.

But at other times, the Chiefs looked like they couldn't contend for a Bud Bowl, much less a Super Bowl. This type of play was seen in a 16-0 defeat by the pathetic Los Angeles Rams in the friendly confines of Arrowhead Stadium.

This year, the Chiefs will have to play the season without Hall of Famer-to-be, Joe Montana. This seems to be a big concern for many people in the Kansas City area.

I feel the absence of Montana is a blessing in disguise. Although Montana was probably the best quarterback to play the game, he was past his prime. Montana was no longer able to throw the long ball as well as he used to.

This hurt the Chiefs offense. The Chiefs were only able to rely on short slant patterns across the middle with Montana throwing. The Chiefs rarely use the long ball against opponents. There was no threat of the Chiefs using a play action fake and going long for a pass completion.

In steps Steve Bono. Bono has a much stronger arm than Montana, and he is already very familiar with the West Coast offense from his days as a 49er. Plus, Chief fans will not have to hold their breath when a pass rush is coming towards the quarterback. Unlike Montana, Bono will be able to take a hit without having to go out of the game.

But if Bono does go down to injury, then Chief fans should not bother turning on the television on Sundays. Bono's backups are Rich Gannon, Matt Blundin and Steve Stenstrom.

Gannon is a journeyman who has had little success wherever he has been. Blundin couldn't even succeed in the minor league of football, known as the World League. Stenstrom is an unproven rookie.

The Chiefs would do just as well with Barney as their backup quarterback.

The Chiefs finished their last season at 9-7. If Chief fans think that it will be possible to return to that record, they are dreaming. The best you can hope for out of the Chumps, I mean Chiefs, is a 8-8 record.

Here are 10 reasons why I think the Chiefs have a slim possibility of obtaining a 8-8 record:

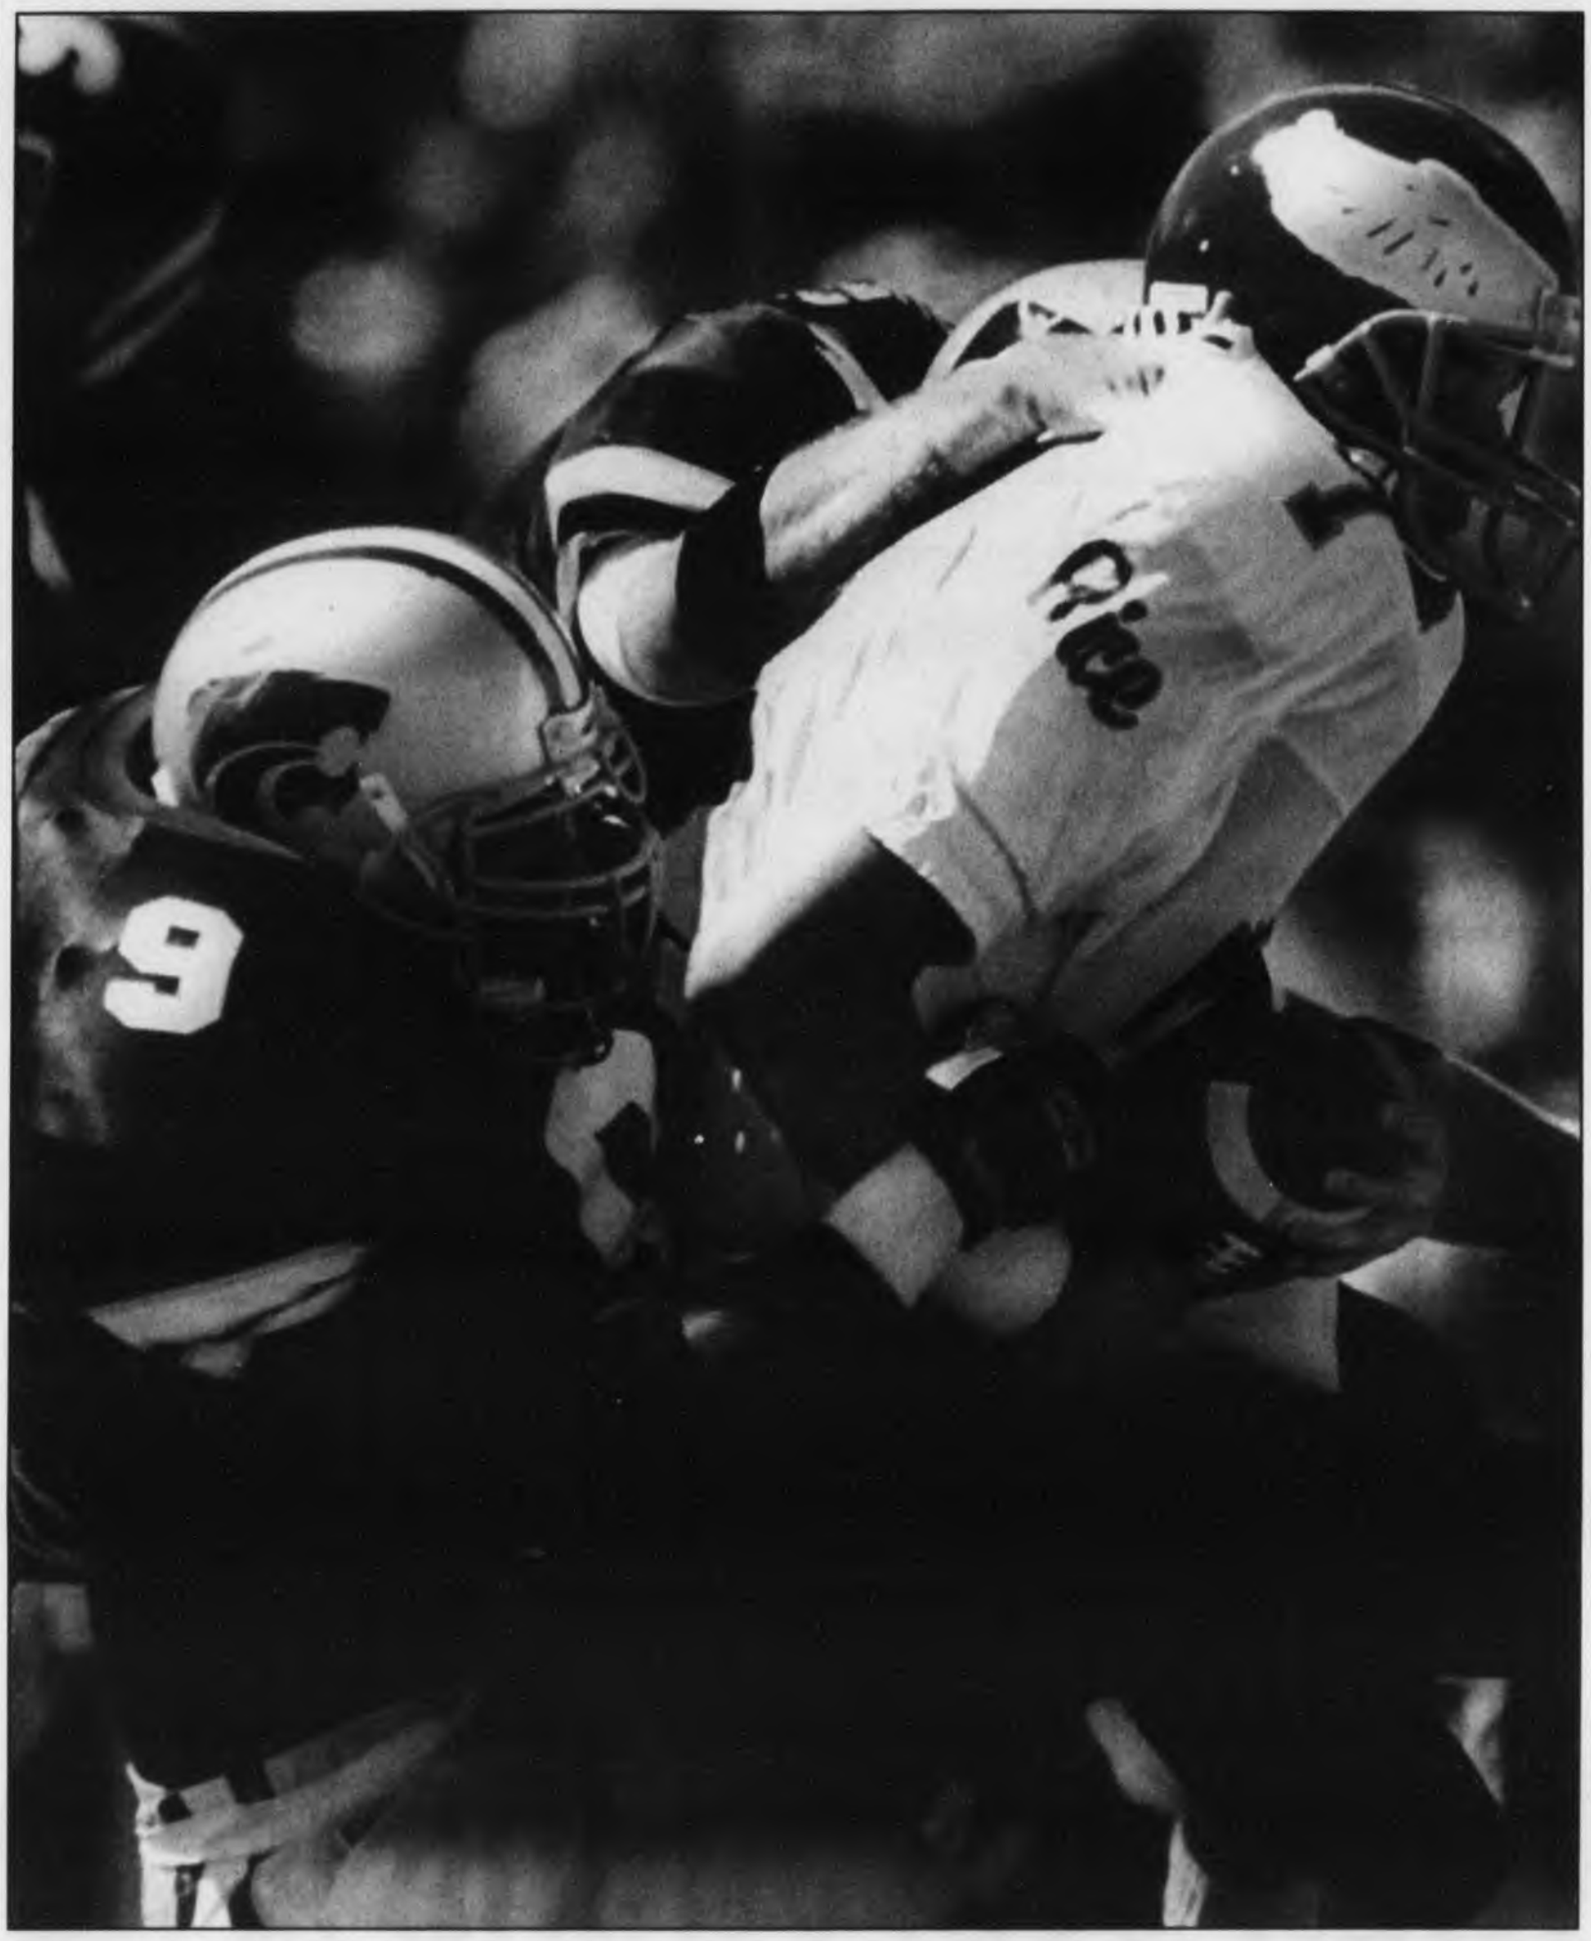
10. More bandages. If Neil Smith can convince everyone on the team to wear them, it will increase self-image, thus create better play.

9. The Chiefs landed former New York Jets defensive backs James Hasty and Brian Washington. The Jets ranked 22nd in the league in defense last year. Of course it makes perfect sense to seek out players from their defense.

8. The Chiefs get to play against seven teams that last year had a combined record of 26-54 (Seattle-twice, Denver-twice, Washington, Houston and Arizona). Surely they can pick up one more win somewhere else.

7. Maybe someone will show them this year how the West Coast offense is supposed to be run.

6. J. J. Smith will emerge to be one of the best running backs in Chiefs history. He came out of one of the best college football schools, right?



5. Last year, the Chiefs got a couple of touchdowns out of backup lineman Joe Valerio. Just think what could happen if they move him to wide receiver.

4. Maybe the Chiefs can lure Deion Sanders to Kansas City. Nah, probably not. He wouldn't play baseball for the minor league team in Kansas City, called the Royals.

3. The Chop. If Chiefs fans use it more often it will scare opponents right out of the stadium.

2. The Chiefs will finally have a quarterback this year that won't need a walker to get out on the field.

1. The Chiefs let safety Ronnie Lott go!

Linebacker Percell Gaskins records a sack against Rice last season. Gaskins is a candidate for the Butkus Award, given to the nation's top linebacker.

Athleticism to compensate for youth of linebackers

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

The 10 players who make up the K-State linebacking corps have combined for 246 tackles in their Wildcat careers.

But 244 of those stops have been made by Percell Gaskins and DeShawn Fogle, leaving two tackles between the other eight players.

Translation: The K-State linebackers, with the exception of Gaskins and Fogle, are young — really young. All of which could spell disaster for the Wildcats on defense.

But all parties are certain the new linebackers will be able to step in and make plays right away, starting Saturday in the season opener against Temple.

"Our linebackers lack experience with the younger guys in there," Gaskins said.

Gaskins said he still has a lot of confidence in the other players.

"They're just as talented and just as hungry," he said.

Joining Fogle and Gaskins in the starting lineup Saturday will be redshirt freshman Travis Ochs. Ochs entered the fall at the top of the depth charts after a solid performance in the spring game.

Redshirt Joe Bob Clements, freshman Mark Simoneau and junior college transfer Jabbar Williams are also expected to see action. But the play of Gaskins and Fogle will be key.

Gaskins, a senior, had 83 stops (fourth on the team) and five sacks (third on the squad) last season. The statistics prove he plays his best during the big games. In eight career games against Nebraska, Colorado, Oklahoma and Kansas, Gaskins has 83 tackles, or 10.3 per game.

Gaskins has been tabbed for the second-straight year as a preseason candidate for the Butkus Award, given annually to the nation's best linebacker.

Fogle had 38 tackles, including 14 stops against Nebraska. Fogle missed the final three games of the regular season with a knee injury, but returned for the Aloha Bowl.

Gaskins is confident he and Fogle will step up and be among the elite in the conference and country.

"As far as athletic ability and skills, we have a couple of linebackers I rate as the top in the nation," he said.

Quickness and speed are the keys for linebackers, enabling them to get off at the snap to get a break on pass coverage or filling the gaps to stop the run.

Led by Gaskins, who runs 40 meters in 4.5 seconds, the linebackers all run below a 4.6, and all have pretty decent size.

With the Cats playing all of their games on turf, speed is important.

"Our defense is predicated on speed, and we have some guys that can really get off the ball," Gaskins said.

Gaskins also said the Cats are equally adept at stopping both the run and the pass — a trait that is needed in the balanced Big 8, where even Nebraska is starting to throw a little more.

"Our strength is we have no weaknesses," he said. "There is not much difference (from '94). We are a lot wiser and have a lot more confidence."

If the Cats want to improve on their third-rated Big 8 defense of a year ago, they'll surely need big seasons from Gaskins and Fogle, but the younger players will also need to make big contributions.

"We know we're going to be more athletic," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I think the thing we're lacking at that position is the experience we lost with Laird Veatch and Kirby Hocutt. Consequently, it's going to take time for them to mature into our program."

Subcommittee meetings will benefit student athletes

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

Here's your chance to run the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. No, not really. But it's probably as close as you'll ever get.

Today is the first of a series of open subcommittee meetings to discuss the early drafts of the University's NCAA Self-Study, the first step toward certification of the athletic department.

While the stated purpose of the self-study is departmental certification (what can be more boring?), this process may be the most comprehensive effort to improve campus life of student athletes ever undertaken at K-State.

The self-study, which will be completed early next year, is the most in-depth report available on the operations of the University and its athletes.

Everything from the construction of the new Academic Learning Center by the Vanier Football Complex to the hiring of K-State's first full-time female assistant athletic director has been evaluated on the basis of its benefit to student athletes.

In many respects, K-State is doing well. The subcommittee reports on Fiscal Integrity, Academic Integrity and Governance and Compliance make some important suggestions for improvement, but have found the school to be pretty clean.

But the Commitment to Equity report is not quite as clean. Numerous examples of unequal treatment are detailed, and steps for improvement are outlined.

There are significant differences in quality between the men's and women's basketball media guides, due primarily to the difference in the funding each receives.

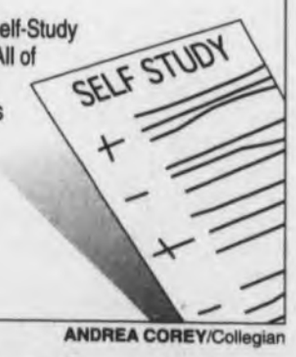
Volleyball and women's basketball are forced to cope with substandard practice equipment, the volleyball team uses poor locker room facilities, and women's tennis has been dipped into its scholarship funds to make up for poor equipment.

The good news is that these problems are being addressed — that they are even being considered.

It hasn't been long since a university was doing well just offering women varsity opportunities.

As complete as this report seems, it can't have caught everything. That's where you come in.

Participation of students, faculty and members of the community is essential for any real improvement to take place. And while asking a pointed question or offering a good suggestion may not land you Athletic Director Max Urick's job, it could help him and the rest of the department do their job more efficiently.



Athletics is a big business. Millions of dollars pour into this and other universities every year just so that we can see basketball, golf and rowing and such at a competitive level. But the students are at the heart of the matter.

This self-study is about the students. That's who you'll help most by coming to the meetings.

NCAA self-study

A series of open meetings regarding the NCAA Self-Study subcommittee reports at K-State have been set. All of the meetings will be held from 4 to 5:15 p.m. in room 212 of the K-State Union. Subcommittee topics and meeting dates are as follows:

- Governance and Compliance, today
- Academic Integrity, Wednesday, Aug. 30.
- Fiscal Integrity, Thursday, Aug. 31.
- Commitment to Equity, Friday, Sept. 1.

Handyman convinces columnist of Darwin's 'Missing Link' theory

COLUMN

NOLAN SCHRAMM

Perhaps the grossest abomination of humanity, threatening to wipe out the bank accounts of college students nationwide, is that of the species Biggus Landlordicus.

I remember the day I moved out of my first Manhattan apartment. It was a happy day. In fact, I was downright giddy.

I had spent the summer in St. Joseph, Mo., which, by the way, has some very interesting city politics.

Just last month, for example, a man representing the downtown business association threatened to erect a giant, inflatable gorilla if the mayor reneged on his campaign promise to remove 123 parking meters from the city streets.

Faced with the prospects of driving to work on Frederick Avenue everyday under the shadow of a towering, ominous-looking, inflated gorilla, I was looking forward to fee payment.

So I came back to Manhattan, to find that my apartment was a mess, and that I had to be out of the place in two days.

Aware that I would have to forge some kind of cooperative cleaning alliance with my roommate, I decided to start with the basics.

I somehow succeeded in motivating him to use the vacuum cleaner, but I doubt I will be able to remember how I did it.

He looked at the machine, obviously dumbfounded.

"You clean with it," I said, helpfully. He looked as if he wanted to hit me.

And then there was the fridge. Its electrical plug was frayed and worn, and if you touched the handle while standing naked in a pool of water, you'd have 120 volts running through your body at mind-boggling speeds.

My roommate discovered this one day when he decided, for some reason, to get a cold beer immediately after his shower.

Mercifully, he lost only temporary control of all his bodily functions and forgot who he was for half an hour. After that, he was fine.

We called the slumlord and demanded he fix it so it would produce this sensation every time someone touched it.

He sent the handyman.

After talking to this self-certified electrician for eight seconds, my roommate and I silently agreed that this man could bring our modified-dream-refrigerator plan to its fruition.

He was a tall man, predisposed to stare with a goofy smile on his face. However, we still didn't want to leave him alone with all of our electrical appliances, and we each had to go to class.

I was the first to return and see the plug. It was a huge, plastic plug, the kind you see on window-unit air conditioners. I nodded my head in satisfaction.

In curiosity, I began reeling up the wire attached to that plug. I found the big, new wire was nothing but an extension cord, with the old, frayed black cord of the refrigerator plugged into it.

The handyman was indeed an asshole. And the landlord pays him for it. Most pathetically, I paid the landlord for it.

Such is the baneful existence of a college student.

Inspiration comes from pain in life

■ Poet writes book about daughter's disease

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

The poet Lucia Cordell Getsi taps the events that have touched deeply in her life.

Getsi, a professor of English and comparative literature at Illinois State University, hails from Bloomington, Ill.

She read from her poetry collection Monday evening to a crowd of listeners in Union 212. The event was part of the fall 1995 readings sponsored by the K-State Department of English.

Getsi's truly American, if not somewhat specifically Midwest experiences, encompass her father's bout with heart problems, musings of womanhood and, most importantly, her daughter's struggle with a rare, debilitating disease.

"You gather those experiences, but you don't know what you'll use them for," Getsi said.

Getsi said because she is from the South, many of her poems inadvertently include stories.

Her newest book of poetry, "Intensive Care," concerns her daughter's affliction of Guillan-Barre Syndrome and near-death experience through Getsi's poetical perspective.

In poems such as "Singing the Night Through," Getsi engagingly recounts staying nights in the hospital at her daughter's bed singing to her, "She's with you, keep singing".

In "Body Lyric," Getsi horrifically describes how Guillan-Barre affects the body:

"Pain in the bones like tuning forks/You are metabolizing cell by cell into spirit."

Her daughter, Manom, had the rare auto-immune response disease from December 1985 through July 1986.

Manom survived Guillan-Barre Syndrome, though the experience has forever changed her life.

Getsi did not begin writing the "Intensive Care" poems until after her daughter had been moved to a rehabilitation center.

"I was glad I was a poet before this happened," Getsi said.

"I wouldn't have been able to do it."

It wasn't until after her daughter recovered that Getsi had time to write.

She credits poetry for saving her.

Getsi's book, "Intensive Care," won the Capricorn Prize for Poetry.

She was recently named 1994 Illinois Author of the Year and 1994 Illinois State University Outstanding Researcher.

She has published five volumes of poetry and translations and has been published in more than 50 journals.

Some of her poems deal with midwestern Illinois.

Her poem "Woman Hanging From Light Pole, Illinois Route 136" is a panoramic offering of plains-states life.

Distinct Midwestern imagery, appropriately similar to a description of Kansas, discusses the vastness of the horizons and the lack of a point of interest to attract your eye.

She concludes with the philosophical, albeit humorous, statement (speaking to the hanging woman): "You know what these farmer's know. To stay here you've got to be tied to something."

■ K-State student, professor run in New York City marathon to raise money for leukemia patients

Jeni Pruitt
staff reporter

Sweat and adrenaline might not save lives, but the efforts of two K-State marathon runners will help.

Dan Fisher, assistant professor of accounting, and Nicole Nelson, sophomore in nutrition, are running for the lives of leukemia patients Mary Hammel and Loren Edgar.

"This is my first marathon, but I really haven't been thinking about running," Nelson said. "I've been concentrating on Loren. It's going to be hard, but there's so much personal drive for Loren that the adrenaline will keep me slowly going."

Nelson and Fisher plan to run in the New York City marathon in November as part of the Leukemia Society of America's Team in Training program.

Each year the program pairs runners and leukemia patients to raise money for research and help for the patients and their families. The money raised by Fisher and Nelson will go to the Kansas Leukemia Society for local use.

Most of my friends, the people I'd ask for donations, aren't rich. Most people think it's all about running. I think its all about raising the money. I would like to thank anyone for even a small donation.

NICOLE NELSON
SOPHOMORE IN NUTRITION

In 1960, leukemia patients had a 4-percent chance of survival. Today, they have a 73-percent chance. Much of that progress is due to the Leukemia Society's research, which is partly funded through the Team in Training program, Nelson said.

Nelson found out about the program after her brother Wayne suffered from leukemia.

"My older brother died of leukemia when he was 17," Nelson said. "The Leukemia Society accidentally sent my brother information asking him to be an honor patient for the program, so I called the society to ask them if I could run in his memory. I'll be running in the honor of Loren and in the memory of my brother Wayne."

For Fisher, joining the Team in Training program for the marathon was the motivation he needed to get in shape again.

"I have run seven marathons before, but that was 10 years ago," Fisher said. "Running then was for me. This time I'm running for a cause. It will probably be my slowest time, but definitely my best marathon."

Fisher and Hammel have raised $6,000, but they hope to raise $7,500 by November. Nelson has raised $1,500, but he needs to raise $3,000 in order to run the marathon for the society.

"I've had a lot of trouble because of my age — I'm 19," Nelson said. "Most of my friends, the people I'd ask for donations, aren't rich. Most people think it's all about running. I think its all about raising the money. I would like to thank anyone for even a small donation."

The Team in Training program began with a woman whose husband was stricken with leukemia. She began running between the hospital and home as a way to relieve stress. In honor of her husband, she ran a marathon using the event as a means of raising funds for leukemia research and raised more than $30,000.

Fisher and Nelson have kept in close contact with their honor patients.

Hammel, director of media services at K-State's College of Education and Fisher's honor patient, has been in remission from leukemia for three years following a bone marrow transplant in 1992.

"I had a person run for me two years ago, but I was too sick to go watch the marathon," Hammel said. "This time, Dann has asked me to go with him."

Nelson's honor patient, Edgar, is 7 years old and has had leukemia since he was 18 months old.

"The family invited me to his seventh birthday," Nelson said. "Cancer has been a reality all of his life. On his cake, his grandma drew a big syringe with an 'X' through it. The doctors think he is almost through with treatments."

To prepare for the marathon, Fisher has been running about 45 miles a week and hopes to be at 60 miles per week by November.

This also includes a long run each week of 20 miles.

Nelson has been running 35 miles per week, with a long run of 10 to 14 miles.

LIBRARY

set-back rules, Attorney Gary Ellis said. Ellis is Bloomberg-Ellis' husband.

Although zoning laws require any major or secondary structure in the block to be set back 25 feet from the street, exceptions are commonly made to such zoning laws, Steve Zilkie, city planner, said.

The library parking lot will be set back a little less than 25 feet from the street.

Bloomberg-Ellis said the distance between the church and the library should also be more than the 12 feet in the plans, but the city planner said the distance between the buildings was within zoning guidelines.

The expansion is on hold until the legal action has been settled, Atchison said. Construction on the project is at least one year behind schedule.

"The city commission has to vote to release the dollars," he said. "While there is a legal question pending, commissioners are not likely to make that decision."

Atchison said the delay might decrease the amount of new services the library will be able to provide once construction is completed.

"Every year that passes, our project will buy the community less," he said.

Estimates for the project were completed two years ago, and the estimate is locked. Even though materials might increase in price, there will be only $2.7 million available for the project, he said.

Atchison said the delays in construction have been very distressing.

While the legal action is pending, the library is fighting increasing space problems.

Five or six years ago, the library had to move its children's programs from the children's room to the public auditorium on the second floor.

"This community is a great community to be a librarian in because people use the library enthusiastically," Atchison said. "We have run out of space."

The most dramatic changes planned are for the Children's Room. Included in the expansion will be more room for programming and an area for showing productions on the first floor of the library.

The basic facility will also be expanded and improved.

American's With Disabilities Act and increased traffic have forced the library to take a closer look at how they can meet their patrons' more basic needs.

"We are woefully inadequate with our restrooms," Atchison said.

Other changes inside the building will include expansion of the automated offerings and more accessibility to the link to Farrell Library.

The library board is also discussing the addition of a public computer lab to allow better access to new forms of automated information.

Changes will also be made outside the building to improve convenience.

The increased size of the parking lot will be only one advantage for customers. The lot will also be redesigned to allow for a smoother flow of traffic, and a drive through book drop will be installed.

Anytime a project of this nature is carried out, the surrounding neighborhood is affected, Atchison said.

"We have sympathy for our neighbors," he said.

Atchison said he felt the library had done its job in proposing and planning the project.

"It will put us in a good position to fill our commitment to the community," he said. "We're very anxious to see this project move ahead."

Ron Fehr, acting city manager, said no hearing date had been set.

"We do anticipate at least a hearing date or something within the next month," Fehr said.

In the meantime, Bloomberg-Ellis said she is taking one day at a time.

"Unless you live in the area that's affected, it's hard to understand what we're doing," she said.

She said the Preservation Alliance, which formed during the controversy over the Koller house, is now working on a project with the city to restore the railroad depot on Fort Riley Boulevard.

The proposal for restoration includes using half of the building for UFM classes and the other half as a design studio for the College of Architecture and Design, she said.

"We're trying to create an awareness in Manhattan that there are historic structures here that need to be preserved," she said. "It's too bad that it had to take this."

FRESHMAN

"I'm now able to sit and recognize faces," she said. "In my Spanish class we worked in the groups we were in the first day, so I'm getting to know those people."

The importance of a syllabus was another thing Carlstrom learned as she familiarized herself with her classes.

"In high school, we never used them," she said. "I just realized that I totally have to follow them to get my homework done and know when things are due."

By Friday, Aug. 25, both Carlstrom and Fisher said they were behind in their reading, and were making weekend plans.

The two planned to attend the Campus Crusade for Christ cookout Friday, and Fisher had a sorority philanthropy to go to on Saturday.

For Carlstrom, who came to K-State from a high school in Littleton, Colo., Saturday marked the day of the women's lacrosse team tryouts.

"I'm really excited to do it," she said. "I've been trying to get Michele to do it, but she's a little hesitant. This would only be my second year playing.

"I like team sports where you have to work together and know how each other moves. It's also a different sport, and not everybody knows what it is."

Carlstrom said she wasn't really nervous about trying out.

"I should be nervous, but I'm really not," she said. "I'm kind of to the point where I don't really care anymore. If I make it — cool. If not — that's fine."

Carlstrom said it was going to take time getting used to Manhattan's humidity and noisy bugs, but she hasn't been as homesick as she had expected to be.

"Our R.A. really has helped," she said. "She's given me a lot of information about Campus Crusade, and even the guy on the guy's wing came by and we talked. It made me feel good because I know that if I had a problem, I know where to go."

Fisher said she is looking forward to getting involved in clubs and activities and having a good year.

"I'm looking forward to learning a lot in my classes, but also having a lot of fun here," she said. "I plan to take advantage of all the opportunities college offers and the real world doesn't — like free aerobics and a free Rec center."

WWII vets to tell stories

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

World War II veterans all over the world have a story to tell.

The Flint Hills Area Veterans Coalition members are telling their stories near the south Dillard's entrance in the Manhattan Town Center Aug. 28 to Sept. 2.

"The person who has been there and the one who wants to ask the question have to reach a common ground," Dell Gates, coalition volunteer, said.

Gates served as a staff sergeant in the Pacific area during the war.

"I have never talked about the war with my two children or my grandchildren," he said.

Gates and two other volunteers sat behind tables covered with photos, magazines and books. A Nazi flag hung in the back of the room. Purple hearts, bronze stars and silver stars shone from inside a glass case.

"It is 50 years, and probably the last natural opportunity to review it if it needs to be reviewed," Gates said.

Most of the men who fought in the war are in their 70s, and many will not be around in another 20 years to tell the stories, he said.

"I find today that I'm ready to get away from it," Gates said. "I would like to forget it."

The display has given Gates and other veterans in the area the opportunity to share their experiences with the community and the younger generation.

Gates and some of his friends from the war have been meeting to rehash memories one weekend a year for the past 10 years.

"The war experience is such a traumatic thing that relationships become an intense thing," Gates said.

"One of the triggers is being able to discuss it with someone who has seen it or knows something about it."

▶ BICYCLE PERMITS

Bike registration to be enforced Nov. 1

Joni Pruitt
staff reporter

Students must register their bikes by Nov. 1 to avoid a $5 fine from the Parking Services and the K-State Police.

Last Wednesday was the official day students could begin to register their bikes. Students who tried to register before last Wednesday were turned away.

"I knew we would have to register our bikes because of last year in student government," Aaron Otto, arts and science senator, said. "I went into Burt Hall Thursday before classes started, and the person just looked at me funny. They told me that I didn't have to register my bike. Heaven forbid someone should try to plan ahead and register early."

Bicycle registration was delayed until Wednesday because Parking Services was busy selling parking permits, Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said Wednesday.

"We've been selling parking permits this week, and it has been hectic for us until now," he said. "As of today, we're encouraging people to register their bikes."

In response to the delayed service, Parking Council voted Thursday to give students until Nov. 1 to register their bikes before issuing fines. This deadline is one month later than the original Oct. 1 cut-off date.

"The Oct. 1 deadline was not realistic, so we're extending it," Darell Edie, Parking Council chairman, said.

▶ BANKING

Merge may benefit patrons

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The $10 billion merger deal to create the nation's biggest bank — the new Chase Manhattan Corp. — will put more money in customers' pockets, bankers and analysts said.

But consumer advocates warn that the merger mania sweeping the industry has already lessened competition and increased bank fees.

"There's no evidence that mergers like this one have benefited consumers in any way," Stephen Brobeck, executive director of the Washington-based Consumers Federation of America, said.

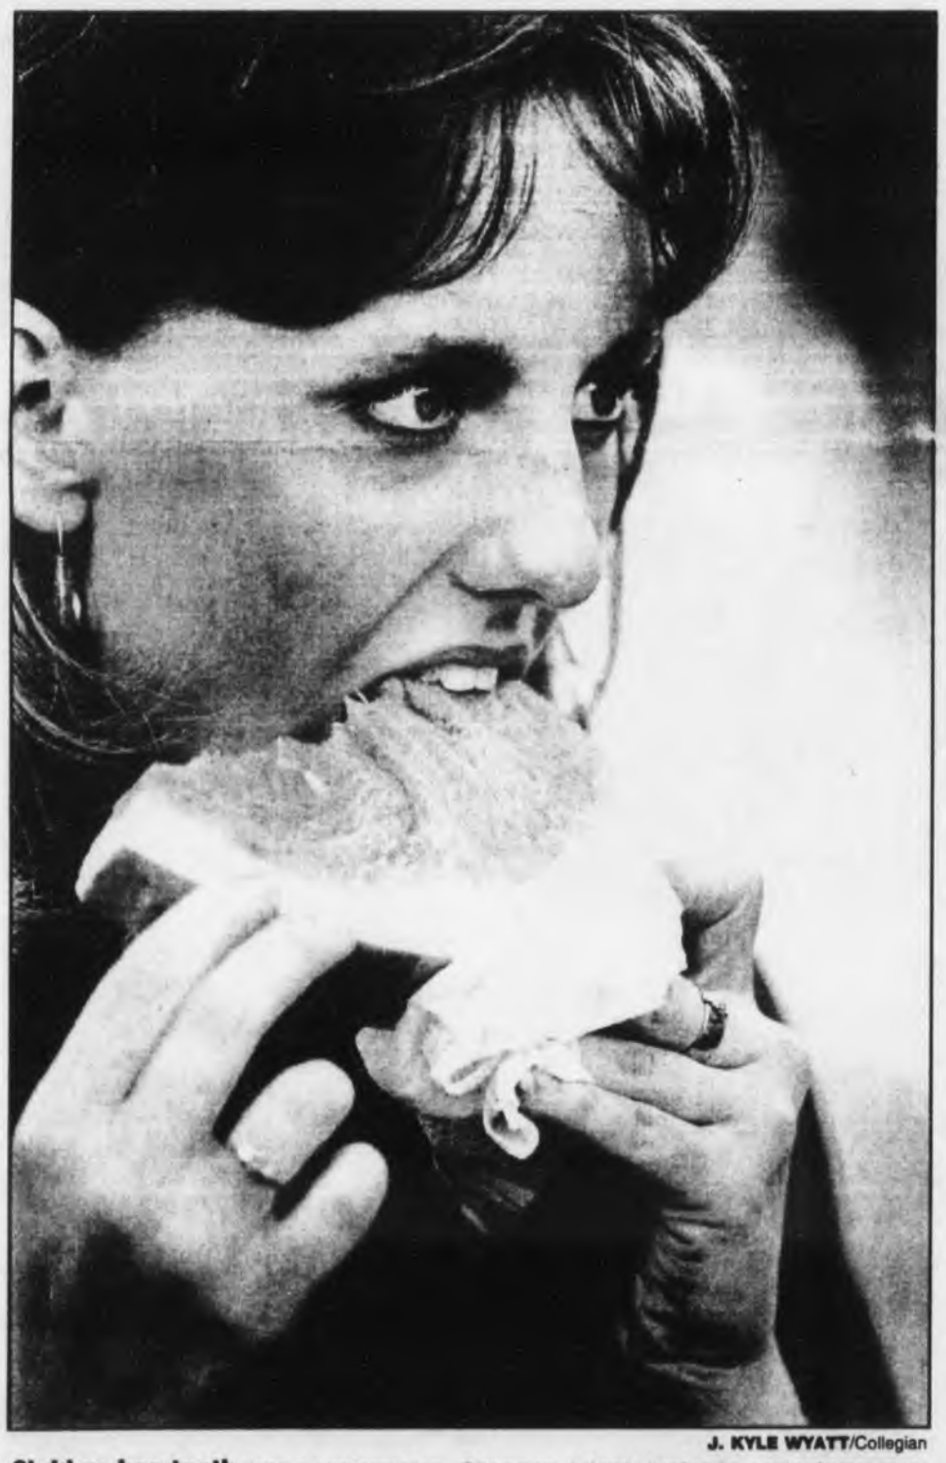
Chase agreed Monday to merge with Chemical Banking Corp. to form a bank that will have 25 million customers nationwide and rank third in mortgage lending and fourth in credit cards. Its $297 billion in assets will surpass Citicorp, now the largest banking firm with $257 billion in assets.

Three other bank deals were announced Monday, including a $2.1 billion merger between National City Corp. of Cleveland and Pittsburgh-based Integra Financial Corp. The other two involve mergers of banks in Texas and California, and Cincinnati and Kentucky.

Bankers said their mergers are driven by the need to better compete with companies like AT&T, General Motors Corp. and Charles Schwab, which lure away customers by offering better deals on an array of traditional bank products like credit cards, checking accounts and investments.

Credit unions and finance companies steal away mortgage customers, and companies seeking loans increasingly raise money in capital markets rather than borrow from banks.

U.S. banks' share of financial assets fell from 40 percent in 1973 to 25 percent in 1993, according to the Federal Reserve Board. During the same period, commercial lending by large banks, like Citicorp and Chase, has dropped from 65 percent to 35 percent of total corporate short-term borrowing.



"Many of our competitors are not banks," Thomas G. Labrecque, chairman and chief executive at Chase, said. That has banks tripping over each other to offer low-rate credit cards and cheap consumer loans — good news for customers.

But it also drives a bigger-is-better mentality among bankers, leading to a feeding frenzy with banks joining forces to capture more market share. That can mean higher fees and fewer choices for customers over time.

Chase and Chemical, both based in New York, are in many of the same businesses — mortgages, credit cards, small-business lending, securities trading, corporate banking and international banking. By merging operations and cutting staff — 12,000 jobs out of a combined 75,000 in 39 states and 51 countries — the banks expect to save $1.5 billion a year.

Those savings will be passed on to consumers in the form of higher interest rates and lower banking fees, Walter Shipley, Chemical's chairman and chief executive, said.

TASTE OF SUMMER HELPS KICK OFF SEMESTER

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

The night began with a nut, bolt and washer mixer.

About 300 agricultural students had to find people in the crowd at the annual College of Agriculture Watermelon Feed Tuesday night who had matching nuts, bolts or washers.

"This is a great social event and a good way to kick off the year for the College of Agriculture," said Jerrod Westfahl, junior in agriculture economics and the president of the agriculture student council.

The watermelon feed is an opportunity for old and new students to mingle and get acquainted with the agriculture faculty, Larry Erpelding, associate director of agriculture academic programs, said.

"It is a chance to renew acquaintances and to expose the students to the programs offered in agriculture, especially the extracurricular programs," Erpelding said. "There will be displays on the lawn and there will be representatives from each club to answer questions."

More than 25 booths at the event represented different agricultural clubs on campus, including the rodeo club, park and recreation management, horticulture and food science.

Many of the students said the feed was a good way to meet people and learn about the different clubs.

"I think this is a great opportunity to meet people in my college," Tonya Hoobler, freshman in agricultural economics, said. "This will also give me a chance to see what clubs are offered."

David Mugler, associate dean and director of academic programs in the College of Agriculture, said the college has increased in enrollment.

"We have 570 new students, and we are up in enrollment more than any other college this fall," Mugler said.

▶ ENVIRONMENT

University recycles, joins effort for safe environment

Chad Moreland
staff reporter

K-State is joining in the fight to save the environment by recycling.

Residence halls, greek housing and the K-State Student Union are making an effort to recycle various products.

"We are currently recycling cans, glass, newspapers, color paper, white paper and cardboard," Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said.

Wooden racks for newspapers and blue trash cans for aluminum are located throughout the Union for student and faculty use.

"We're trying to be part of the effort toward recycling, and I hope in the future we can have a better system," Connaughton said.

One concern of Connaughton's is storage space.

"It would be nice if we didn't have to store everything," Connaughton said. "Maybe if the campus had some kind of program where a truck came by on a daily basis."

Howie's Recycling Center is in charge of picking up the Union's stored goods, but pick-ups only occur four times a month.

The residence halls and greek housing recycle in the individual halls and houses.

"The residence halls recycle floor by floor," Skyler Harper, assistant director of facility management, said. "It consists mainly of aluminum cans and newspapers. The money they get goes toward their floor income."

Room for storage is also a problem for residence halls. Unlike the Union, students from the floors are forced to take the storage to the recycling center.

The residence halls are in the process of electing new floor managers. Once these students are selected, they will start to focus their efforts on the recycling process.

Greek housing is also striving to incorporate recycling into its daily routine. Some of the houses recycle newspapers and cans, but some have taken it a step further.

"We recycle plastics, like shampoo bottles, cardboard, aluminum cans and newspapers," said Faye Premer, social chairman for Delta Delta Delta.

The Tri-Delts have a committee who organizes volunteers to take the stored goods to recycling centers.

Pi Beta Phi also expressed a strong desire to help the environment.

"We recycle glass, plastic, cans, newspapers and cardboard," Martha Reynard, housemother for the Pi Phis, said.

Former department leader named interim dean to college

Melissa Hoyt
staff writer

The College of Architecture announced the placement of an interim dean, effective Sept. 5.

Landscape architecture Professor Dennis Law will serve as the interim dean.

Law will be replacing Dean Lane Marshall, who will be resigning because of hearing-related problems.

Marshall announced his resignation last spring. But because of the worsening of his hearing problem, he recommended to University Provost James Coffman that an interim dean be appointed.

"By virtually any measure, the college has come a long way during the more than six years that Lane Marshall has been dean," Coffman said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said Marshall will be missed.

"Lane Marshall has been an excellent dean, and we will miss having him in that post. However, Provost Coffman and I look forward to working with Dennis Law."

Law, the former head of the landscape architecture department, has served K-State since 1974. During Law's tenure as head of the department, students and faculty received

▶ POSTAL SERVICE

Employee opens fire, injures 2

Associated Press

PALATINE, Ill. — An employee walked into a Postal Service mail processing center Tuesday and opened fire on co-workers, wounding two people, authorities said. The suspect was later arrested at his home.

The gunman shot one person in the second-floor sorting area of the U.S. Postal Service building in this northwestern Chicago suburb, walked downstairs to the lobby and shot another man, witnesses said.

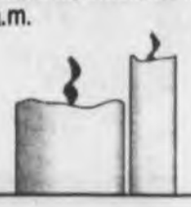
One man was in critical condition. All three workers were postal clerks, plant manager Mark Tovey said.

Worker Cynthia Murray said she heard two quick shots, then saw panic break out among the roughly 200 employees at the sprawling glass and steel building.

"People were just falling all over each other," Murray said. "I saw people trample over people, and I saw the smoke from the gun."

Clerk Maude Kelly said she has worked with both the victims and the gunman for about 20 years. All were friends, she said.

"I can't figure out why he did it. We've been here for a long time. He was just a beautiful guy. We would joke and laugh together."



The suspect was arrested 20 miles away at his home in the suburb of Northlake, police said. He was identified by police as senior postal clerk Dorsey Thomas.

Police Cmdr. Jim Haider had said earlier that the lobby shooting occurred first. Postal Service inspectors refused to confirm the sequence of events.

TROPICAL WEATHER THREATENS LAUNCH OF SHUTTLE ENDEAVOUR

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The weather outlook for this week's launch of space shuttle Endeavour has worsened somewhat because of all the tropical storm activity in the Atlantic.

"There are just a lot of unknowns," shuttle weather officer Ed Priselac said.

Endeavour is scheduled to blast off at 11:04 a.m. Thursday following repairs to avert O-ring problems in the nozzles of the solid rocket boosters. Nozzle O-ring seals were singed by hot-rocket gas during NASA's two previous shuttle launches, prompting repairs to Endeavour that delayed its science mission nearly a month.

Priselac said he expects a 60-percent chance of good launch weather on Thursday, less favorable than his earlier prediction. The main concerns are chances of rain and high wind.

It's been the busiest Atlantic storm season in decades. Two new tropical storms formed Monday in the Atlantic, Karen and Luis, and storm Iris strengthened again to hurricane status far from land. Weather disturbances are classified as tropical storms and get a name when their wind speed reaches 39 mph. They are deemed hurricanes if wind speed reaches 75 mph.

SEXUAL HARASSMENT LECTURER EXPERIENCES VIOLATION 1STHAND

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — A lawyer in town to lecture on sexual harassment said a man sneaked up while she was shopping, pointed an instant camera up her skirt and took a picture.

When he did the same thing to her an hour later Friday, bystanders chased him down, pinned him in the parking lot and called the police.

"I just couldn't believe he did it a second time," 43-year-old Diana P. Scott of Los Angeles said.

Richard Marquez, 38, was arrested on charges of creating a public nuisance and disorderly conduct.

Scott — who said she has very good legs and was wearing a short skirt — was browsing in a shop when she heard a whirring click.

She said she turned and realized a man had taken a picture up her skirt. She said the man ran out. When she heard the click again later, Scott said she was angry.

"It was stupid, but here we were running through the store," Scott said. "I was yelling, 'Stop that guy!'"

Police Capt. Ray Rael said officers found photographs on the man. Scott identified herself as one of several subjects in the photos. Rael said the man was photographing women's underwear.

Scott was in Santa Fe to lecture at the American Law Institute.

SERBS FIRE MORTAR, KILL 35

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs fired the mortar shell that killed at least 35 people and maimed 80 others in an open-air Sarajevo market, a spokesperson for the United Nations said Tuesday.

The shelling Monday was the worst attack on Sarajevo's civilians in the 40-month-old Bosnian war since Feb. 5, 1994, when another mortar shell struck the same marketplace, killing 68 people.

U.N. spokesperson Alexander Ivanko said U.N. investigators concluded, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the attack came from Bosnian Serb positions.

Because the U.N. findings implicate the Serbs, the United Nations, which has pledged to protect Sarajevo and other remaining U.N. safe zones, is under intense pressure to ask NATO for punitive airstrikes.

"All options are now being considered," Ivanko said.

That would abort any chance of success for the latest peace initiative, set to resume this afternoon in Paris. Initial meetings were Monday night.

PRODUCE PESTICIDE RESIDUE LOW

WASHINGTON — Seven out of 10 produce samples tested by the Agriculture Department in 1993 had traces of pesticides, but the government said the amounts are too small to cause worry.

For apples the amount was even higher — 97 percent had pesticide residues.

The department gathers the data so regulators can figure out what really turns up in food and limit pesticide use accordingly. The figures will become more important as the government looks for a way to set levels that take in consideration the eating habits and growing bodies of infants and children.

The report noted the residues in a dozen popular fresh fruits and vegetables were far below the legal limits set by the Environmental Protection Agency. It also noted that illegal residues were found in only 1.5 percent of the 7,328 samples. There were 58 different pesticides detected.

Many samples of other fruits and vegetables showed no pesticide traces at all. Three-quarters of the broccoli samples and nearly half the lettuce had no detectable residues.

'A Purple Affair' to remember

■ Anything goes on this radio talk-show forum

Jonathon Yeomans
staff reporter

Sex therapists, dream interpreters, fortune tellers and Rodney King's lawyer.

Students can find out about these topics and more on the K-State's "A Purple Affair," which is sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9.

"We have had Fred Phelps, Pete the Cabdriver and even Stan Freeman, the world's premiere UFO specialist," Aaron Decker, senior in radio and television, said.

"I'm surprised more people aren't tuning in. This is K-State's only talk show that addresses national events, human interest stories and campus issues."

From 10 to 11 p.m., Monday through Thursday, listeners can tune their radios to DB92 and listen to discussions about anything from bike problems to the wall built around Farrell Library's construction.

The show also acts as a public forum where students can call in and express their personal opinions.

"Campus issues are fun to talk about, but it's pointless to talk about them if we don't get anybody else's viewpoint," Decker said. "When our phone line is working, there is never a dull night. Regardless of if we're telling someone to throw their roommate's aquarium out the ninth-floor window or if our live remote is following Pizza Shuttle."

A Purple Affair's live remote travels to various places and events that concern the students.

"We try to set up at different locations for almost every show," Maggie Otvos, senior in theater and part of the live remote crew, said. "They can get pretty interesting."

Decker, the only returning staff member to the show, said "A Purple Affair" has increased from five to nine staff members.

"We are looking forward to an exciting year," Jason Dechant, junior in political science and a co-host, said. "We are trying to bring the focus of the show back to campus issues. We want to inform the students about activities on campus."

Last year five staff members ran the entire show. This year five staff members are on-air personalities, and four others research, write and produce the show.

"This year is a lot different," Decker said. "We have an expanded staff, and new job positions have been created. The show is a lot smoother. Someone that has helped us a great deal is our producer, Don Torrez. 'A Purple Affair' could not happen without his help."

▶ CHEERLEADING

Cheerleaders search for new coach

Melinda Carter
contributing writer

The season is beginning, and the K-State cheerleaders are still without a coach.

"I hope to have a coach by the end of the week," Eric Harper, assistant athletic director, said.

There are about three or four people being considered for the coaching position, he said.

"Being a K-State cheerleader is about being proud to be a K-Stater and leading the crowd," Kristy Ackerman, senior in marketing, said. "We want somebody who reflects that part of us."

For now, the coaching responsibility has been delegated to cheer captains Al Un, senior in psychology, and Ackerman.

"The captains are organizing all of the practices, and I attend practice from time to time," Harper said.

All of the coaching candidates are former K-State cheerleaders.

"I feel that they would do their job a little better because they feel more pride in what goes on with the cheerleaders," Harper said.

Both Un and Ackerman agreed with Harper.

"I think it's great," Un said. "They know what goes on here at K-State. They know what's expected with all the time commitments."

Someone who had been on the squad would have the entire squad's interest in mind, Ackerman said.

"I think having a K-State cheerleading alumnus would help to keep K-State tradition. That's the job of a coach — to keep tradition and make new tradition," she said.

Many might think that a coach would stand around at practice to critique motions, smiles, voices and anything else that may need to be touched up on, but Un said that was only about 10 percent of the job.

"I was pretty excited about all the responsibility at first, but since I've started doing it, my ideas have changed. It really is a job," he said.

Ackerman said the job is more than meets the eye.

"We have to reserve Brandeberry, make agendas, get release forms and judge's forms, schedule appearances and stuff like that," Ackerman said.

Though Un and Ackerman both said it has been hard to juggle being captains, coaches and students at the same time, they agreed the hardest part is having to be the voice of authority.

"We have to tell people what to do, which is the hardest part because, you know, those are our friends," Un said.

Parking Service's bicycle registration needless

The approximately 1,300 bicyclists at K-State must register their bikes by Nov. 1 or face a $5 fine from Parking Services.

K-State Parking Services has a great new source of potential revenue — bicyclists.

The approximately 1,300 bicyclists at K-State must register their bikes by Nov. 1 or face a $5 fine from Parking Services.

Administrators have said money collected from these fines, in addition to regular traffic tickets, will go into a fund to build bike trails and bike racks.

The truth is the University has a responsibility to build those trails and racks, the same way it must build and upkeep the sidewalks and buildings on campus.

Proponents claim registration will help officers enforce the traffic laws.

But registration was never needed before.

Police were still able to ticket people who were riding on the sidewalk, and they wheel-locked bikes that were locked to wheelchair ramps.

Perhaps the strongest argument for registration is it allows police to have a record of a bike's serial number and owner identification, which would aid in the recovery of stolen bikes, if they were found.

This is a benefit of registering. But registering should be voluntary, like it has been.

Registration will be free — this year.

But the door is open for a future Parking Council to initiate a fee.

Three years from now, when new students have entered the University, Parking Council is likely to phase in a registration fee.

Not only does this empty the pockets of the students, but it also discourages them from riding bikes to school.

Of course, then the University wouldn't have to build bike paths.

On the World Wide Web

Quick — a show of hands from the underclassmen — Who has figured out where the computer labs are and has been using them with any kind of regularity?

Really? Put your hands down now. You look ridiculous.

A piece of information from me to you: Now that you've paid your tuition, K-State has a freebie waiting in the Nichols Hall computer lab or in the basement of Fairchild Hall. It's your very own computer account. Just go right in and ask. The natives are friendly.

This neat little gift allows you to e-mail your buddies in Australia, Canada and the University of Kansas to tell them what a great place this is. Once you've done that, you are also in the prime spot to access the World Wide Web. Take it from me, this is the fun part. I spent half my summer going blind in front of my computer checking out Web pages.

Some of these addresses were taken from issues of Newsweek, and some I found on my own. Most of these pages link to other pages, so once you get started, just point and click.

So without further ado, here are the fruits of my labor. Here, in no particular order, are some Web pages I feel are worth looking at.

■ "50 Greatest Conspiracies of All Time." This gem is brought to us by the guys who wrote a book by the same title. It features cow mutilations, Manchurian lab rats and more. When you feel too secure in your world, play the Find Oswald game, and that feeling just goes away. This one has also been nominated as a Top-10 Web Site.

■ "World's First Collaborative Sentence." Feel free to add on to this project — no periods are allowed, but you can use lots of exclamation points and question marks. Warning: This thing rarely makes sense.
(http://math240.lehman.cuny.edu/ar)

■ "The Spot." Also a Top-10 nominee and highly addictive, this page follows the lives of five good-looking twentysomethings who share a beach house in Southern California called the Spot. It's episodic, with each member logging on every day or so. You can e-mail the Spot dwellers, and they will most likely answer back. This is a good page for soap-opera junkies who can't admit to sitting in front of the television. A soap for the computer literate, if you will.
(http://www.TheSpot.com/)

■ "The U Magazine home page." If you got a U Magazine last week, then you got this address. I checked it out, and the Collegian was ranked No. 4 on the list of best on-line college papers. Yeah! This site, like many, is under construction, but it does have pictures of naked people if you're into that sort of thing.
(http://www.umagazine.com/)

■ "Scott's Home page." This page belongs to a friend of mine who decided to take the plunge in and put himself on-line. Whether this is a good thing or a bad thing has yet to be determined. Scott has a brief history of himself and pictures of his girlfriend, her daughters and the first girl ever to break his heart. Scott's a student here. See if you can figure out which department he's in.
(http://www.ksu.edu/~scotwt/hmpage.html)

Quick note here: Pages done by individual people tend to be more eccentric than pages done by organizations. I found one that was put together by a guy named Dave in Minnesota who featured 200 redneck jokes. Surfers beware.

■ "Carlos A. Howard Funeral Home."

This page is just nuts. If you feel you must plan for that trip to the great beyond and you can't leave home, go here to order the coffin. They have styles and prices to make your selection easier. I have a creepy feeling that pages like this will soon become more of the norm than the exception. But I can't fault the guy for trying to make a living.
(http://porthos.itribe.net/shops/Carlos_A_Howard_Funeral_Home.html)

This is just an inkling of what's out there, but it should get the novice started. There's a science-fiction magazine put together by a local writing group coming out soon, and I'll have more information as it comes in. If anyone finds something you think I should know about, drop me a line care of the Collegian. Happy hunting!

▶ PARKING DILEMMA

Editor,

I am one of those who always agreed with editorials and letters that chided those drivers who weren't willing to park in the more remote lots on campus, such as my usual one, which is behind Weber Arena. I thought drivers needed to be realistic about the situation and come a little earlier to allow for walking time.

However, this semester, the situation is very different. No spaces are open at 9 a.m. behind Weber Arena, in the West Stadium, or in the VetMed Complex, formerly the lot of last resort. I, and 10 or 15 other drivers, circled VetMed futilely Tuesday, and probably 30 or more cars were cruising in the Weber lots.

The issue now is whether any spots exist anywhere, period. I can't afford to get a ticket every day, or quit my job, or continue to pay for a parking spot that doesn't exist. Riding a bike is not a realistic option for me. To arrive on campus earlier would theoretically solve my problem, but it wouldn't actually improve parking on campus, and my work day starts at 9:30.

I realize that all the necessary construction has caused a lot of these problems. But the work of the University still has to go on, and the workers need to be able to get to campus, as do, of course, our students.

I would gladly take a shuttle from Bramlage or park in a temporary gravel lot. I hope the University will once again try to come up with some solutions, and I will continue to try to come to work.

Culture dying with NEA

America has existed as an oxymoron, or a contradiction in terms, since its conception as a nation.

Certain truths, said to be self-evident, appeared only on paper and not in the mental cognizance in which the 13 colonies existed; the very makeup of our electoral system no longer subsides on a citizenry wish but in the wallets of lobbyists.

As the different American consummates forge their way through the tumultuous existence of today's society, a new twist in the road to the tattered American Dream forks out: The spreading of multiculturalism and the cutting of the budget for the National Endowment for the Arts.

The NEA has a history of funding quality projects, giving artists a chance to live and create, and giving voice to different sects of America that cannot be expressed through politics or the media.

From the early photography of Robert Mapplethorpe to unknown painters and poets giving rise to modern prophecy, the idea of diversity has spread. Under the now-infamous Contract With America, the NEA's funding falls under the ax of so-called reform.

In 1990, multiculturalism was a buzzword; now, it's both a political inferno and a way of life that has the power to change collegiate curriculums, as we have seen discussed in our own student and faculty senates.

COLUMN

JUSTIN WILD

As a major in education and English, all my classes now contain some segment on the enculturation of different societies in America, bending to the voices advocating change.

Therein lies the dark cloud of irony that has fed multiculturalism and sent the NEA into drought. As a nation that personifies itself as a melting pot, I find it odd that we would turn down the burner on an entree which has long grown stale.

If those who exist to give their culture a talented voice no longer have funding, how can they continue to subside and express to the general public the true voice of their own population?

And so, Congress and a president (who has made a goal to appoint women and minorities to positions of power) have taken one of the prime voices of diversity and sent it spinning into oblivion. What's sad about this fact is that, after a while, the voices that have not been heard will not be missed.

In education, the central heart of America's future, the whole process of identifying varying cultures will blur, turning a cultural statement into a wide-sweeping declaration, which has no sub-points, only generalization.

As more and more artists lose their funding, common mediums of societal education like the media will gain more of a foothold and influence in American society.

I find this frightening simply because the media allocates only one face to many problems, highlighting poverty, crime and the overclass.

As different cultures gain a foothold in America that extends past their current means, such as music, the individual voices that have the possibility to give a true meaning to a nameless face will have a more difficult time gaining acceptance a definitive, legitimate voice. The dilemma, though, has a solution, one that can begin with any undergraduate on any campus across the country.

Start attending the cultural forums offered and see the unrecognized existence that fuels the heart and soul of a minority.

Turn off the run-of-the-mill overpaid political voices bending the truth and instead look at the political history of our country. There you will see the future as well as the past.

As the funding dissipates, not only for the NEA but in our own campus budget, pay attention to the artistic drives of our own community and let their voices shape your opinion of a culture rather than the negative light portrayed within our own spiritually bankrupt popular culture.

The future, as we know it, has always been in our hands. Don't let political trends make you think the truth still exists; everyone who labors to improve the image of what they believe in and gives their culture a positive, intelligent voice knows that the truth in our national community is an unworn path.

GARAGE SALE TIDBITS

Ask the person running the garage sale if you can plug in anything electrical to make sure it works.

If you're buying furniture, look under the cusions to make sure there are no unidentifiable stains. Any loose change is a plus.

The price marked on the item is not always the bottom line at garage sales. You can usually barter with the owner.

Look closely at everything at the garage sale. Treasures are usually buried.

In pursuit ... of the ultimate bargain

scavengers seek hidden treasures in unlikely places

story by Claudette Riley • art by Matt Hawkins

Whether it's a handful of silverware for pocket change or an army jacket for less than a cheeseburger, garage sales mean bargains.

But garage sales don't just happen — they evolve. Replaced household appliances, old clothes and unwanted knickknacks overflow in storage until finally an ad is placed. Then, on Saturday morning, neighbors sift for deals on the lawn.

Danya Hartley, Manhattan resident, said she collected garage-sale items in her basement all summer. Her garage sale was just a step toward spring cleaning.

"You know that makeup drawer with everything in it? Well, I decided to clean it out. Even little bottles of lotion went," Hartley said. "All the stuff you think they're going to buy, they don't, and all the stuff you think you won't sell, that's what they want. If I had the same sale next week, they'd buy different stuff."

Hartley's goal was to keep as little as possible.

"I know some people are real hardcore garage-sale fanatics, but I just wanted to get rid of the stuff," Hartley said.

Parting with a baby monitor was difficult for Hartley.

"A neighbor told me that when there's something she doesn't want to part with, she puts a high price on it. That way if it goes, it goes, but if not, fine too," she said.

Hartley had help from her 5-year-old daughter, Hillary, who arranged baby clothes and toys on tables in the driveway.

"Most men hate garage sales. So I got up early this morning and said to my husband that if he would just put the tables out and set them up, then he could go back to bed," Hartley said.

When Micah and Kristen Hedrick were packing to relocate to Arizona, they discovered they had more things than they wanted to move.

"When we got married, we each had stuff from our own apartments and presents from the wedding, so basically three of everything," Kristen Hedrick said.

"When we decided to move, we just didn't need everything, especially the smaller appliances for an apartment. That's why we geared the ad toward students, because it's mostly stuff they could use and might want."

While setting up for the sale early in the morning of Aug. 26, they found something they wanted to keep.

"We set up a new tent on the lawn that was a present," Micah Hedrick said. "We thought it was just a little pup tent, but once it was up, we saw that it was full-size and took it back down. It almost went for $15."

Furniture and clothes sold before the small appliances, shoes, linens and personal items, Kristen Hedrick said.

"We had a man get a little mad about a price and stomp off, which I could not understand because he didn't try to bargain or make us an offer. Some people are more adamant than others about talking us down on the price, but most are completely pleasant," Kristen Hedrick said.

Subha Sridharan, first-year graduate student in architecture, was lured to a garage sale in a quest for bargains.

"We found an apartment and just need to furnish it," Sridharan said. "Things are obviously much cheaper here, and you find things that are more interesting. We got a handful of silverware for 25 cents. That's why we came."

Curiosity compelled Tony Armstrong, Manhattan resident, to help his friends scour for bargains at garage sales.

"Sure, you get better prices, and we're looking for kitchen stuff, but how many times do you get to see the inside of someone else's garage?" he said.

Beverly Saunders, an office assistant for the Department of Statistics, said she considers herself a veteran of garage sales.

"I go about every weekend, starting in March," Saunders said. "The prices are what brings me here. You can wheel and deal with garage sales. Besides, it's kind of like recycling for me. When my kids have outgrown clothes, we give them to the Salvation Army, and while we're there, I usually pick something else up."

Saunders said she occasionally has a hard time convincing her friends to join her on weekends.

"Some of my friends don't like yard sales, but I tell them I'm beating out the middleman and, of course, getting what I want," Saunders said.

"I think some people are just too proud to get out and look for a bargain."

By shopping thrift stores and garage sales, Saunders said she believes she saves about 80 percent of the department-store cost.

"Clothes are the big thing. If I can find a blouse for my daughter for 75 cents, why should I pay full price? I wash and clean everything I buy before they wear it anyway," Saunders said.

Helma McNeice has had five or six garage sales since moving to Manhattan in the '70s. She attends garage sales in hopes of finding a swing set and said collectors often show up requesting specific items.

"People in my age group don't look for bargains anymore. We go more for entertainment because it's one type of group that goes garage-saling. It's those out to have a good time, and so you get to see the same old friends," McNeice said.

There is an element of trust in holding a garage sale that is rarely violated, McNeice said.

"We have a lot of bathroom-users and nice people, but once we had a beautiful set of dishes and somebody took one. That kind of thing is rare, though," McNeice said.

"You're just so glad you want to sell things and that other people want them, and this is such a neat way to do it. I think garage-saling is uniquely American," she said. "If I get company from Germany, I have to take them out garage-saling at least one Saturday because there's nothing else like it."

"All the stuff you think they're going to buy, they don't, and all the stuff you think you won't sell, that's what they want. If I had the same sale next week, they'd buy different stuff."

DANYA HARTLEY, MANHATTAN RESIDENT

"Clothes are a big thing. If I can find a blouse for my daughter for 75 cents, why should I pay full price? I wash and clean everything I buy before they wear it anyway."

Dear Coach Snyder: Here's what I want for my birthday

I am not one to ask for much from people, but come that one birthday time of the year, I try to milk it for all it's worth.

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

Aug. 31 is the annual celebration of my birth, and I have compiled a short want list for the big day.

All gifts should be directed toward the Collegian newsroom, so without further ado, here's the big list in no particular order.

■ A K-State football schedule with a week-four home game against Pacific. If the defending national champion and traditional football powerhouse, Nebraska, is allowed to face off against Pacific again this year after scoring 70 points in last year's blowout, why can't the Cats be able to schedule something like this?

Routs against schools like Pacific make national champions. Ten-point wins against schools like Temple, Cincinnati, Akron and Northern Illinois just don't cut it.

■ Bill Snyder's off-season travel log. I want the scoop on when he's leaving K-State and for what school.

■ Snyder's confidence. At yesterday's press conference, Snyder was calm, cool and confident when discussing the upcoming season. Snyder seems to have forgotten the falling apart last Christmas in the Aloha Bowl. I could never be that confident.

■ Defensive end Nyle Wiren's aura. With Wiren's newly shaved head and thick, fully grown goatee, he scared me in our one-on-one interview. The 6-foot-1, 245-pound end is closing in on defensive tackle Tim Colston for the title of Most Menacing Cat.

■ Speaking of hair, quarterback Matt Miller's hair. Miller has the prettiest 'do in all of the Big 8. He may be the prettiest Wildcat of the bunch.

■ The Nebraska game at home. I don't care how close we came two years ago in Lincoln. It won't happen this year. These Cats cannot beat the 1995 Cornhuskers in the Sea of Red in Nebraska's Memorial Stadium.

Direct all gifts to the Collegian newsroom, or to my place of living, should any seductive and sexy females be stalking me and know where I live.

■ A right leg that could consistently kick 40-yard field goals. With all the turmoil in the kicking position right now between Martin Gramatica and Scott Collins, it wouldn't take much to take the job away from both of them.

■ Backup quarterback Brian Kavanagh's job. He's not too much more tested than me, and I just want to stand on the sidelines for one game wearing the cool purple jerseys. Coach Snyder, I request the number double zero, and the last name is spelled S-T-E-W-A-R-T.

■ Kansas City Star columnist Jason Whitlock's commanding press-room presence. If I were an ex-offensive lineman in college, I too could talk to whichever players and coaches I wanted to when I wanted to. My 6'1", 165-pound frame somehow just doesn't cut it.

■ A bulldozer and a couple tons of grass seed. K-State has no business playing on artificial turf in Wagner Field. Practice on carpet, play on grass. Case closed.

■ Cincinnati Bengals' injured rookie Ki-Jana Carter's home phone number. When I visit Cincinnati next weekend to cover the Cats' game there, I would like to have a quick chat with the highly touted rookie and see just how he is spending all that No. 1 draft pick money while sitting on the couch waiting for his injury to heal.

■ A birthday date with a girl who can name two players on the defensive side of the ball and who thinks the NBC show "Friends" is a trendy show that won't last one more season.

So, as I said above, direct all gifts to the Collegian newsroom or my place of living, should any seductive and sexy females be stalking me and know where I live.

I will have the thank-you cards out next week.

Snyder's assistants branch out

Robert Patnode
staff reporter

Some people measure a good football program by the number of wins the school earns every year.

Other people say it's the school's final ranking in the polls or a bowl appearance.

What makes a good football program?

It starts with the coach. Most Wildcat fans say Coach Bill Snyder is a great coach and has established a great program. So good is the program that other schools are taking notice.

Last year, coaches from Minnesota came to Manhattan to look at the improved facilities. The Gopher staff was analyzing how they could realize the same type of improvement in their program.

Other schools are also coming to Manhattan to find coaches.

It's their hard work that has helped Snyder turn around K-State's program. They're usually recognized only by Snyder and the players until one of them leaves to go to another school.

In six years at K-State, Snyder has lost 15 assistant coaches, including seven in the last two years.

Following the 1993 season, defensive line coach Nelson Barnes went to the University of Texas; strength and conditioning coach Greg Finnegan went to Boston College; running backs coach Ben Griffith went into private business; offensive line coach John Latina went to Clemson, and special teams coach Nick Quartaro left to become coach at Fordham University.

Following last season, offensive coordinator Del Miller accepted the coaching position at Southwest Missouri State, and special teams coach Manny Matsakis was named coach at Emporia State.

Other former assistant coaches who have moved on include Mississippi State defensive line coach John Hendrick, Baylor defensive coordinator Bob Cope, University of Tennessee running backs coach Charlie Coe, linebackers coach Kevin Ramsey and the NFL Carolina Panthers strength and conditioning coach Jerry Palmieri.

It's an impressive list for a coach who has led the Wildcats to a 18-5-1 record and back-to-back bowl appearances the last two seasons.

Snyder said nothing has come easily.

"Coaching is such a demanding profession that you either have to have a chemical imbalance in the brain to be a part of it or you are driven and highly motivated," Snyder said.

"If you are a competitive individual, then you want to reach every level you can reach."

Latina, who was offensive line coach at K-State from 1989 to 1993, said that Snyder had to build the program from scratch.

"Everything needed to be fixed," Latina said. "That's why it took so long to turn things around. That's why people in our profession look at K-State as the model program in terms of program improvement."

Latina said it's been easier at Clemson having the facilities and the reputation of a national power.

Barnes said K-State has made tremendous improvements in its facilities, bringing it almost to the level of powers such as Texas.

"Texas has always had great facilities, so what K-State has made an attempt to do is to get to that national scale with the University of Texas," he said.

Latina said it's the harmony of the coaches that makes them a great team.

"They have a tremendous staff in terms of coaching strategy, but more importantly, they have camaraderie, togetherness and all working toward one common goal."

"K-State has excellent assistant coaches. Bobby and Mike Stoops and Jim Leavitt are all excellent coaches. It's a very close-knit group, and everybody got along and worked hard for the the same goal."

Although the coaching turnover has been heavy, one assistant remains firmly attached to the Wildcat program.

In the last two years, co-defensive coordinator Bobby Stoops has turned down offers from Colorado and Notre Dame.

Experienced backfield to anchor defense

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

Last year, the defensive backfield was Coach Bill Snyder's question mark.

This year, it is his strength.

Behind the strength of four returning starters, Chris Canty, Mario Smith, Chuck Marlowe and Joe Gordon, the defensive secondary has been tabbed the best in the nation by both The Sporting News and Lindy's Big 8 Football.

Canty said it was the foursome's aggressiveness that was the key.

"Everybody plays hard and plays with intensity, discipline and great effort," Canty said.

That effort helped the 1994 secondary lead the Big 8 in pass defense. In fact, the vaunted Wildcat defense allowed only seven passing touchdowns the entire season.

Smith said it wasn't just the secondary, but the defense as a whole.

"We rely on every position on the field," Smith said. "Everyone plays a part."

Two of the stars in the secondary are Marlowe and Gordon, who both earned first-team all-Big 8 honors last season.

Both have been listed as top candidates for the Jim Thorpe Award, given to the nation's top defensive back.

Additionally, Gordon has been tabbed as the eighth-best back by the Sporting News and was ranked No. 10 by Lindy's.

But despite all the success and accolades, Canty said even the secondary couldn't get over last season's Aloha Bowl loss.

"The Aloha Bowl as a building experience gave us a lot to think about for 227 days as of Aug. 9. I know it's been on my mind for awhile, and it's been on everyone else's mind," Canty said.

"It let us know we can't take things for granted. We've got to go out and play every game."

And playing every game hard, Smith said, is the most important thing for the secondary and the rest of the defense.

"We are 11 crazy dogs on the field. We love what we do," Smith said.

"We try to play as hard as we can."

Subcommittee report analyzes Intercollegiate Athletic Department's record of governance, NCAA compliance

Chad Moreland
staff reporter

The first in a series of open meetings regarding the NCAA Self-Study subcommittee reports at K-State was yesterday.

The meeting involved the governance and compliance aspects of the new study program.

"This study actually started last March, when the NCAA sent a representative here to orient us as to what we were to do," said Bob Snell, chairman of the Subcommittee on Governance and Compliance.

Since that time, the various groups have been working to compile an organized set of rules and regulations that are complete, concise and understandable.

Much like academic accreditation, the NCAA's new certification program is designed to ensure integrity in the institution's athletic operations.

"Prior to this, there was a self-study that universities would do every five years and have on file. But there was no reporting requirement other than the president had to report that the self-study was done and it was on file," Snell, a professor of civil engineering, said.

The Governance and Compliance Subcommittee handles many of the key issues that are involved with the self-study program.

One of the main goals of the study is to show that the missions of the University and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics share a common theme of dedication to the development of student athletes through academic success as well as character development and community involvement.

Other issues include the process by which major decisions regarding intercollegiate athletics are made and the involvement of the President and the institution's governing board in the outcome of these issues.

Emphasis is also placed on the control of booster-club activities, as well as how the institution has organized itself to maintain compliance with all NCAA regulations.

Once the study is completed, an external group of reviewers will conduct a three- to four-day evaluation.

"Basically, they want to see if you're actually doing what you say you're doing," Snell said.

The group will then report to the NCAA Committee on Athletics Certification, which will determine the University's certification status.

A school can be certified, certified with conditions, and not certified. Universities that don't conduct the self-studies or fail to correct problems are subject to significant NCAA sanctions.

■ Excess military stock donated to Indian health facilities

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — To the military, the stuff is just taking up space in a warehouse.

But to the money-strapped hospitals and clinics that serve American Indians, $6 million in medical supplies and equipment is a godsend.

Everything from bandages to X-ray machines is being shipped from an Air Force warehouse this month to Indian health facilities from North Carolina to Alaska.

The equipment, some of it never used, comes from U.S. bases that are closing in Great Britain and Denmark.

"The military was stuck with a lot of perfectly good medical supplies and equipment that normally would be given to undeveloped countries," said Kenneth Bricker, a spokesman for the federal Indian Health Service.

> SPOKESMAN FOR THE FEDERAL INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

The supplies were earmarked for Ukraine, but Congress intervened and ordered the Pentagon to give them to American Indian facilities instead. Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said the material would fill a critical need.

Another $90 million in equipment and supplies is expected to become available during the next two years as additional European bases shut down, he said.

The material is badly needed, both to replace obsolete machines and furnishings and to stock new health-service facilities that often must open without adequate equipment.

"A lot of this equipment has never been used, or it's in excellent shape," said Vincent Mosser, an agency official in Minnesota.

The Indian Health Service is so chronically short of money that the agency says it meets only 70 percent of the medical needs of Indians.

Some 55 tons of equipment worth nearly $1 million was shipped to Alaska last week. A 10-bed hospital at Barrow, on the northern tip of Alaska, is getting some X-ray equipment to replace its aging machines.

Other facilities in the state are receiving refrigerators, sterilizers, testing equipment and even whirlpools.

In South Dakota, the ambulance service on the Cheyenne River Reservation is getting two suctioning machines.

One will replace the antiquated device on a 22-year-old ambulance.

The other will replace a machine that's broken on a second ambulance.

"Our budget is very minimal. We can only afford a few things," Alta Tiger, service manager, said.

In Minnesota, a health care center under construction on the White Earth Reservation is getting a traction machine, whirlpool and other physical therapy equipment.

It's difficult to recruit physical therapists to a reservation, but the equipment will make it easier, Mosser said. The Defense Department is picking up the shipping costs for the project. The material is being distributed by Air Force planes and the military reserves.

"This is responsible stewardship of federal resources, not a waste of taxpayers' money," he said.

The project is a perfect example of what can be creatively achieved when federal departments and agencies cooperate with each other in the spirit of teamwork, said Philip Lee, an assistant secretary for the Department of Health and Human Services.

Judge decides 5-year-old must be taught English

■ Speaking only Spanish compared to child abuse for Texas family

Associated Press

AMARILLO, Texas — A woman is speaking English to her 5-year-old daughter at home now because a judge told her that speaking only Spanish amounted to child abuse.

Marta Laureano, who was born and raised in Mexico, speaks English fluently.

But, she said, she used Spanish at home because she wanted her daughter, a kindergartner whose name was not released, to grow up bilingual.

"I am giving her an advantage that not everybody has," she said.

Language became an issue when Laureano's ex-husband said the only English their daughter was learning was what he taught her.

Timothy Garcia was seeking rights for unsupervised visits with his 5-year-old daughter.

State District Judge Samuel C. Kiser's order, dated Aug. 16, does not prohibit Laureano from speaking Spanish at home.

Instead, Kiser ordered her to speak English to her daughter in conjunction with Spanish.

"If she starts first grade with the other children and cannot even speak the language that the teachers and the other children speak, and she's a full-blood American citizen, you're abusing that child and you're relegating her to the position of a housemaid," Kiser said, according to a transcript of a hearing earlier this summer.

Kiser, who granted Garcia's visitation request, himself studied in South America as a college student.

He said he occasionally speaks Spanish to his children at the dinner table.

Laureano said Monday she speaks English a little at home now.

"It's not 100 percent, but I'm just doing my best," she said. Laureano said she plans to appeal.

Her ex-husband defended the judge. "He was fair," Garcia said. "He was fair to both of us."

Some Hispanic leaders said they want to talk it over with Kiser.

"People are really upset because they feel the judge insulted people of Hispanic origin or any race that speaks another language at home," said Ramon Godoy, editor of a Spanish-language newspaper in Amarillo. "There were also some calls that said, 'Leave the judge in peace.'"

The Rev. Jacinto Alderete said Kiser was out of line.

"I think she is being taught the language at school, and that is what the schools are for — teaching them the English language on the basis of the Spanish that they know," Alderete said.

Area thefts bring about awareness

■ Computer owners have options for safeguarding equipment

Source: Computing and Networking Services SARA SMITH/Collegian

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

Safety should be a concern for area computer owners.

Although two area buildings were robbed of computers during the summer, Capt. Steve French of the Riley County Police Department said the two crimes probably were not related.

The Kansas Lumber Homestore, 111 South Seth Childs Road, was broken into on July 13 and robbed of $17,000 worth of computers.

Just one week after the burglary at the Homestore, on July 20, employees of Bergman Elementary School, 3430 Lombard Drive, discovered two computers missing, Joan Spiker, Bergman principal, said.

After taking inventory, the school's faculty found three computers were stolen along with construction materials and two camcorders.

Loss was estimated at $9,000 by the school, and the contractors who are building the new school building, Spiker said.

There is no indication at all that the two crimes were performed by the same people, French said.

"The Homestore was a forced entry, and Bergman was a theft with no signs of forced entry," French said.

Spiker said the equipment from her school was taken without a break-in because the building is still under construction, and at the time, there were several ways to enter.

Spiker said security procedures have been put in place to prevent any further thefts.

The three computers stolen from the school were Gateway 2000s, including the hard drives, monitors and printers. The computers were valued at more than $1,800 each, she said.

Kansas Homestore declined to comment on its losses because the investigation is ongoing.

Although French said the two thefts are probably not related, he said if the leads happen to go in the same direction the police department will definitely follow that direction of investigation.

"We're working on some leads at this time, but we don't have any suspects," he said.

French said if anyone is offered a too-good-to-turn-down deal on a used computer, he would like to know.

Richard Herrman, K-State Police investigator, said there are several ways students and faculty can prevent their computers from being stolen.

Herrman said if a computer is marked boldly with the owner's name, the computer is harder to hide or disguise.

Computer owners can also engrave their names and driver's-license numbers on the inside of the casing for identification.

Herrman said the main way to keep computers secure is to lock doors and do not leave office or apartment doors open when you are away.

K-State computers have been stolen in the past from Nichols, Seaton and Dickens halls, said Kenneth Conrow, assistant director of computing and networking services.

Herrman said two computers were stolen from K-State offices during the summer, but one was an older computer that was taken from a storeroom and no longer in use.

Computers belonging to K-State are now either secured down by cable or protected by alarm systems, Conrow said.

The public computers in Nichols Hall are now fastened down by either braided-steel cables, which are hard to cut, or fiber-optic cables that sound an alarm when cut.

Conrow said the braided-steel cables are not hard to find. The fiber-optics cables were ordered from a security company in Kansas City.

Anyone interested in fastening their computers with cable should use security screws on their casing, Conrow said.. Security screws can only be loosened by a particular screwdriver.

President's partner pleads innocent

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.— President Clinton's Whitewater business partner pleaded innocent Tuesday to federal charges of conspiring with a former judge who accused the president of pressuring him to make shady loans.

James B. McDougal was arraigned on 19 counts in a federal indictment that also named his former wife, Susan McDougal, and Gov. Jim Guy Tucker.

"To all counts, I plead not guilty," McDougal told U.S. Magistrate Jerry Cavaneau, who set a trial date for Oct. 10. Tucker pleaded innocent to 11 counts on Monday. Susan McDougal, charged in eight counts, is to be arraigned later this week.

The three are accused of lying about the real purposes of $3 million in federally backed loans and using some of the money for themselves.

The McDougals were partners with then-Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and his wife, Hillary, in the failed Whitewater land-development deal.

Four of the counts against McDougal and his wife related specifically to a $300,000 loan made to Susan McDougal in 1986 by David Hale, a former judge, through Hale's federally backed Capital Management Services Inc. Hale has said Clinton pressured him to make the loan. Clinton has called Hale's statement a bunch of bull.

McDougal said after Tuesday's arraignment that he was looking forward to being acquitted but did not relish a trial that could drag on for two months.

"It would be like having a root canal every day," he said.

McDougal said he would not cut a deal. "I wouldn't plead to a $50 speeding ticket," he said. "I will not bargain with these political prosecutors."

Funding cuts reduce student-financial aid

■ Loans and grants may be out of reach

Jonathan Yeomans
staff reporter

The K-State director of financial aid encouraged students to fight congressional cuts in loans and grants during a leadership forum in the K-State Student Union Tuesday afternoon.

"There are some major things happening," Larry Moeder said. "Congress is looking at cuts of $10 billion in student financial aid in five to seven years.

"Students need to be aware of what Congress is doing. They need to respond to their congressional representatives and tell them that assistance must not be cut," he said.

Eighteen people attended the event and eight to 10 people stood around the perimeter of the courtyard. The event was sponsored by Union Program Council.

Toby Crouse, junior in pre-law, expressed concern about the proposed cuts.

"I think Congress cutting money for financial aid will hurt young adults' chances at getting a quality education," he said.

The next issue discussed was the $9.2-million renovation and expansion of the Union.

"We are already seeing the results of our efforts," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

"Architects are working on concepts to present to the students and staff," he said. "One of the main concepts adopted and shared with the architects is that we want to be heavier into branding."

Branding would mean bringing name-brand fast food and specialty shops into the Union.

"There is also going to be a student-activities center in one central location," Bosco said.

Bosco also said there are going to be repairs to the infrastructure of the building.

One of the students in the audience expressed frustration over the slow advance of the project.

"I haven't seen any results of the Union-enhancement project," said Brian Hartis, sophomore in construction science and management. "I bet I won't see it finished."

Another subject discussed at the forum was UPC and its events.

"This year our theme is UPC no limit, meaning that there is no limit to what we can do or what students can do," UPC President Pat Carney said. "For us, the sky is the limit. We need the support of students the entire way."

One of the big projects this year was the reorganization of UPC-sponsored concerts, Carney said.

"We are risking money and covering our risks," he said. "By setting up concert reserves, if we lose money on a concert, the program wouldn't crash."

The representative for Student Senate, Chairman John Potter, was concerned with this year's fees.

"The budget resolutions this year are for the optional fees and evaluating the services they provide to decrease costs," Potter said. "We want to know how people who use these services would pay for them if they were not included with tuition."

The parking garage issue was also addressed.

"Senate passed a resolution to President Wefald stating that we didn't think it was in the students' best interests to have a parking garage in Old Stadium," he said.

However, some students said they think differently.

"I believe in an allocation of money for a parking garage," Bill Molitor, junior in marketing, said. "I feel it is needed."

City seeks support, funding for improvement

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

The city is making another attempt at getting state funds to add a turning lane on Anderson Avenue between Denison Avenue and 16th Street.

The city's request for a grant to work on that intersection was turned down last year. City staff recommended that updated applications for the same project be submitted again.

The commissioners voted 5-0 Tuesday afternoon to authorize Mayor Edith Stunkel to sign a letter of support and for staff to submit an applications for funds to the Kansas Department of Transportation for this and another city project.

The funds would also be used to install a turn signal, Jerry Petty, director of community development, said.

"Generally, traffic is a mess at 17th and Anderson. It needs improved to handle the traffic it has now, let alone increased traffic," Petty said.

Construction on Anderson would begin in 1999 if the funds are provided. Part of the funding for the project could also come from the city-university fund created after the annexation of K-State last year.

In a letter to the KDOT, the commission stated K-State wanted to build a parking garage in the area.

A proposal to build a parking garage in Memorial Stadium was put on hold this spring because a turning lane would be needed on Anderson to handle the increased traffic a garage would create.

The University is now looking for alternate sites for the garage.

The other application is to provide turning lanes on Fort Riley Boulevard at the 10th Street intersection. A turn signal will also be installed at the intersection if warranted, Petty said.

The commissioners also voted 5-0 to authorize Stunkel and the city clerk to execute a grant agreement with the Federal Aviation Association for the second phase of the Municipal Airport terminal construction project.

The grant agreement will allocate $545,000 for two change orders at the airport, Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said.

The first phase of the project was design and preliminary construction of the new terminal. FAA provided funds for this process.

The city is now signing an agreement for funds to help pay for the second phase of the project, which includes construction and examination of construction.

An additional $584,000 will be provided by the transit gas tax, and $223,000 will be acquired by issuing bonds, McCallum said.

Construction on the new terminal building will begin in October at the earliest, McCallum said.

The commission then recessed into executive session for the purpose of discussing personnel matters to evaluate applicants for the position of city manager.

Trial may be in Oklahoma, defense files for new judge

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh's lawyer said Friday that he would not object to the case being tried by an Oklahoma judge, provided the trial is at a distant site.

Steven Jones, the head of McVeigh's defense team, has filed a motion asking U.S. District Judge Wayne Alley to step aside, claiming he was too affected by the blast to be impartial. Jones also has said he will seek to move the trial far away from the emotionally charged atmosphere of Oklahoma City.

On Friday he said his objection to Alley refers mostly to the damage that his chambers and courtroom suffered during the blast. Alley himself was not in Oklahoma City when the nearby Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building was bombed on April 19. The explosion killed 168 people and injured more than 500.

"If the judge granted a meaningful change of venue, then that mere fact would mitigate against any allegation that the judge was biased," Jones said.

Jones said that McVeigh could not get a fair trial in Oklahoma City and has predicted that a conviction would be overturned.

"If he stays on the case and tries it in Oklahoma, then he's written propositions one and two of the appellate brief to overturn the conviction," Jones said.

Alley said he sees no reason to excuse himself since he lost no friends in the blast. One of his staff was slightly injured.

Jones has proposed Charleston, W. Va., Portland, Ore., Seattle and San Francisco as alternate sites. He has until Oct. 7 to file a motion seeking a change of venue. U.S. Attorney Patrick Ryan said he opposes moving the trial out of Oklahoma because he wants victims' families to have access.

McVeigh and fellow suspect Terry Nichols could face the death penalty if convicted on federal anti-terrorism charges.

Also on Friday, Nichols' attorneys filed a supplement to their own motion seeking Alley's removal.

The supplement argues that the defense suffers from a hostile environment that pervades the federal courthouse in Oklahoma City. Because Alley and his staff work there, they are necessarily affected by it, wrote D. Kate Rubin, one of Nichols' attorneys.

Live music returns with the Urge

Page Getz
contributing writer

If your lecture notes have left you cross-eyed, if microwave popcorn is not your drug of choice and if the Pizza Shuttle delivery boy isn't exactly the peak of your Thursday night, check out Berlin tonight.

Pamper the Madman, a Kansas City favorite, will join the Urge, an undefinable patchwork of music styles from St. Louis in the ongoing séance to raise the live-music scene from critical condition.

Pamper the Madman makes its third pilgrimage to the Little Apple since it competed last January in the Battle of the Bands at Snookie's Bar.

"I think they're one of the better bands coming out of Kansas City," Tori Johnson, KSDB FM-91.9 local spotlight D.J., said. "Their stage performance is good, as well as their style."

Bassist Marshall Strong, vocalist Theresa Schloegel, guitarist Rob Wagner and drummer Chris Fuget generate both an alluring and intimidating, raw and avenging harmonic discourse that is, in a word, erotic.

"The band is tight," said Russell Behrends, an employee at Streetside Records. "The guitarist plays a Flying V, and he's really quick on his fingers. He does this Van Halen tapping kind of thing."

"(Schloegel) gets really psyched up about the music," he said. "She has a wide range of vocals, and she spins around a lot," he said.

The Urge played a stint with 311 last October. Both bands hail from St. Louis, and the Urge has even been compared to 311.

"They're kind of like 311," Behrends said. "There is a sharp crossover in the style, a 380-degree turn when the music starts with a traditional reggae beat into almost a 1980s rock metal.

"People can dance to it," he said. "That's why it's popular."

The lyrics, which are actually decipherable, project social discontent. For example, in the song, "Killing is Easy," the band takes a sarcastic approach, both minimizing and mocking the desensitization in casual gun violence.

The unpredictable interruption of two trombones and a saxophone pierce through what could otherwise be classified as typical hard rock. It has a touch of ska but could more easily be compared to Lawrence's Billy Goat.

The band most recently played at Lawrence's Jayhawk Festival on Sunday.

Matt Lynch, senior in sociology, lifts the front tire of his mountain bike over a railing near Bluemont Hall before securing it with a lock Tuesday. Students must register their bikes by Nov. 1 to avoid a $5 fine. "I don't know how they're going to enforce it. If I worked at Parking Services, I wouldn't want to do it (hand out tickets)," Lynch said.

Enforcing bicycle regulations

In an effort to better enforce bicycle regulations on campus, Parking Services and the K-State police are requiring bicycle identification.

Registration

Students can register their bikes for free at the Parking Services office in Burt 128 or at the campus police station in East Stadium. Students riding bikes on campus must have them registered by Nov. 1 to avoid a $5 fine from the Parking Services and the K-State Police.

A bike fair will occur Sept. 13 in the free-speech zone between Seaton Hall and the Union to encourage students to register their bikes.

KSU Bicycle Regulation violations

- Parking outside of any bicycle rack.
- Parking in a manner that constitutes a safety hazard.
- Failure to obey all parking and traffic control devices, signs and/or equipment.

BIKE

The bike-registration process is free and takes two or three minutes, Archer said.

Students fill out a registration card at the Parking Services office in Burt 128 or at the campus police station in East Stadium.

Students who registered their bikes through the residence halls must also register them through Parking Services.

The registration card asks for the bicycle description and serial number, and it asks for the student's address, phone number and Social Security number.

The office gives the students an identification decal for their bicycles, bicycle-trail maps and bicycle-regulation pamphlets. The decal must be placed on the bike to avoid the fine.

"It sounds like a hassle to have to get this sticker, but I think it has a lot of advantages, especially since it's a free service," Otto said.

Although registration is free this year, Parking Council last spring discussed initiating a fee sometime in the future. The council decided not to charge this year, but future councils could decide to initiate a fee.

Russell Fortmeyer, Senate Parking Committee chairman, said he thought registration was just a prelude to charging a bike-registration fee.

"The registration is free this year, but three to four years down the road, they want to start charging to make more money to provide services," he said.

Fortmeyer said he thought the registration would only create a bureaucracy.

"Is this only going to create a need for another secretary to file registrations, ticketers and office staff instead of providing services for students?" he said.

Edie said the bike registration policy was established by the Parking Council last year to protect and serve the students.

"As a guesstimate, we have 1,300 bikes on campus. That's just for on-campus students," Edie said.

"We want to track down where people on campus and off campus are commuting from so we can build bike trails to better accommodate them.

"We also have their safety in mind. An estimated 84 bikes get stolen on campus each year. The registration policy will allow us to track them better," he said.

Beyond serving the students, the bicycle-registration policy will have the potential to protect the University against lawsuits, John Lambert, director of public safety, said.

In 1993, a student was riding her bicycle on the sidewalk between Waters and Anderson halls. The student tripped over a hose and filed a lawsuit against the University.

The University had regulations against riding bicycles on the sidewalk but had failed to enforce them. The student claimed lack of enforcement of the regulations resulted in her injury. The University settled out of court for $25,000.

"What I saw was the necessity that we attempt to enforce our regulations about riding bikes on the sidewalk," said Richard Seaton, the University attorney who handled the case.

"It's easier to enforce these regulations if you can identify the bikes."

The council will be sponsoring a bike fair Sept. 13 in the free-speech zone between Seaton Hall and the K-State Student Union to encourage students to register their bikes.

Local bike shops and the campus police will be distributing materials inside the Union.

In addition, booths will be set up in the Union at various times during the year.

"The approach we're taking is a very laid-back one," Archer said.

"We will first educate the public about the regulations and the benefits of the registration. Come Nov. 1, we will begin to issue warnings. We're not going to take a hard stance or approach."

Spirits appear at volcano

■ Believers gather at mysterious mountain

Associated Press

WEED, Calif. — Ellin Stamps said she saw a refugee from a lost continent who lives in the volcano at Mount Shasta.

Sharon Rose said UFOs have flown over the volcano, and the disembodied voice rumbled, "Welcome, you're home," when she first saw the mountain.

And the giant faces of spirits occasionally appear to Irene Annell Binder.

Scores of New Age believers have flocked to the two towns at the base of Mount Shasta to immerse themselves in the volcano's magic, avail themselves of its healing powers and access its gateway to the spirit world.

Many got their first look at the mountain in 1987, when 5,000 people had a harmonic convergence to celebrate a planetary alignment. Some never left.

Since then, Weed and Mount Shasta — timber and tourist towns 260 miles north of San Francisco — have emerged as New Age capitals with a combined population of more than 7,000.

Believers — nicknamed cosmic muffins by some longtime residents — have made the 14,161-foot peak a central part of alternative lifestyles that include meditation, holistic medicine and a focus on spiritual consciousness.

"We're in the beginning of the New Age, and this is a safe place for it to happen," Rose said.

Many have set up shops to share information about the mountain and New Age practices. Others publish pamphlets and newspapers.

The summer edition of Mount Shasta's New Directions includes an interview with Princess Sharula Dux from Telos, which is identified as a Lemurian city within Mount Shasta.

> "I try to feel the spirits of the mountain, to find the good ones."
> IRENE ANNELL BINDER, RESIDENT OF MOUNT SHASTA

Lemurians are defined as highly civilized refugees from the ancient kingdom of Mu, now submerged beneath the Pacific Ocean. They supposedly are tall, communicate by extrasensory perception and appear and vanish at will. They are reputed to live in an elaborate underground tunnel system within the mountain.

Stamps, 55, a self-described spiritual healer, said she saw a Lemurian at a point overlooking the mountain.

"He was 7 feet tall and had long golden hair. I wanted to call him a hippie, but it was my mind trying to rationalize," she said.

She said she was paralyzed until the Lemurian vanished. It seemed like a brief episode, she said, but two hours had elapsed on her watch.

Binder, 50, a retired paper plant worker, said she keeps her eyes on the mountain as much as possible.

"One of the faces I see is of Eve, as in the Bible. I see the same faces over and over. They're spiritual somehow," Binder said. "I try to feel the spirits of the mountain, to find the good ones."

Mount Shasta is one of the volcanoes in the lower 48 states that scientists believe will erupt in the coming decades. Its last eruption was in 1786. Mount St. Helens, another volcano in the range, erupted in 1980.

American Indians have long considered the mountain spiritual. The Klamath and Modoc tribes told of a cataclysmic battle between the sky spirit, chief Skell, who lived atop Mount Shasta, and Llao, spirit chief of the underworld.

Rose believes the mountain has an energy vortex. She said it brings unhappiness and sorrow to the surface for resolution.

"You sit in the vortex, and you stew," she said. "It's hell. Tears come up. Entire concepts of what life is about go out the window. It's very disconcerting. It's like, who am I?"

But for longtime residents like Josie Merrill, the mountain is not all that mysterious.

"I was born and raised here," Merrill, a 42-year-old waitress, said. "I've never seen a UFO or someone from a lost continent, and I've never felt a vortex."

Band reunites, moves forward

■ Dokken survives after troubled times, drugs

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Eighties lite metal is dormant these days, and such bands as Slaughter and Warrant have been dropped from the major recording contracts they landed and relegated to small independent labels.

One band, though, has survived.

Dokken, hugely popular a decade ago with a string of gold and platinum albums, signed to Columbia and put out its best record to date, "Dysfunctional." It's left behind the '80s and matured tenfold in sound and subject matter.

"A lot of these bands, they went up the ladder, they went down the ladder," singer Don Dokken said. "We went to the top — we didn't get our downside curve. If we could have stayed together, maybe we would have fell by the way with everybody else.

"It was kind of a double-edged sword that we went away at the peak of our career for so long (and) to come back in a bad musical climate, but I still believe — and maybe I'm just a foolish man — that if you make good songs and a good record, it will surface."

Dokken came out of the same Los Angeles scene that produced Motley Crue, Faster Pussycat and many others. Sporting singer Don Dokken's distinctive vocals and guitarist George Lynch's unique fretwork, the band rode albums like "Tooth and Nail" and "Under Lock and Key" and singles like "Alone Again" and "In My Dreams" up the charts.

But after years of infighting, which Dokken says was about his bandmates' drug abuse, the band split at the height of its popularity.

"I didn't do drugs," Dokken said, "so I was odd man out. Mick (Brown) was hung over, George was snorting lines of coke between songs on stage — I couldn't take it, and I begged and I pleaded and nobody listened to me, so I said, 'OK, I quit.' "

"Dysfunctional" was to have been Dokken's second solo album. He and bassist Jeff Pilson wrote the record and were about to release it when drummer Brown and Lynch got in touch.

He admits that his relationship with Lynch, even though the guitarist and the rest of the band have been sober for years, is still rocky.

"The first couple months were still shaky with George," he said. "(He) and I were still butting heads pretty hard."

But when the band started rehearsing, he knew it was right.

"It was like we never broke up," he said. "To do our best work, I guess we do need each other."

After years of writing about what he called love and broken hearts, Dokken's new songs are more pointed, more serious. He said the new direction came from re-examining his life. That's where thoughtful, introspective songs like "Hole in My Head" and "The Maze" come from.

"I was seeing all these things, the world changing in front of my eyes," he said. "I had a niece whom I was very fond of who was 8 years old who died of leukemia. (That) just kind of totally jogged my sense of mortality.

"A friend who Mick and I knew for years walked off a cliff and died of exposure. We had a friend (who) died of AIDS, a guy who overdosed on heroin. You get older and all of a sudden, people are dying around you."

The harrowing "What Price" deals with child molestation.

"We are models of our parents, and I believe that's where I lucked out, because I wasn't raised by my parents," he said. "I was raised in foster homes. I regretted not having a mother and father until I got to know my mother and father down the road.

"They were 15 when I was born. My father was in the Korean War, and my mother went to a mental institution. I love them, but they are a mess."

Dokken said he wanted to maintain the band's identity and grow at the same time. It was tough to do.

"I was so paranoid about this record not sounding like I was trying to be commercial, or grunge or speed metal," he said.

Food workers needed

▶ The Department of Housing and Dining Services is looking for students to work at the Van Zile, Derby and Kramer centers.

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

Student part-time jobs are just around the corner — or around the residence halls.

The Department of Housing and Dining Services is looking for a few good food-service workers.

"We always have some openings at the beginning of the school year," said Mary Molt, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services. "I know right now at Van Zile Food Center we need three to four people for lunch and dinners on Mondays and Wednesdays."

This year the centers have opened more food lines and tried some different concepts, which has caused a need for more workers, she said.

"At Derby, we could use probably 10 to 15 more students for each meal, and then at Kramer we need about eight to 12 for each meal. There are plenty of opportunities for students to work," Molt said.

Most of the available jobs at the dining centers are service jobs in the cafeteria, and there are some openings in the centers' dish-service areas.

"In the dish area, we need people to work with the dishes and do some janitorial things. We also might hire some people who would want to work with food production," Molt said.

The average amount of hours spent working at the dining centers varies from worker to worker, Molt said. Freshmen will usually be limited to working 15 hours a week until they get used to the working environment.

The dining centers are willing to work around a student's class schedule, said Laura Hessenflow, an undecided sophomore and Derby worker.

"Usually I get weekends off whenever I want," Hessenflow said. "They work really hard to get you the hours that you want. They are so flexible that you can fit it into your schedule if you want to work."

Starting pay for workers at the dining center is $4.35 per hour, and raises come periodically after the first 100 hours. To apply for a job, students apply at the dining center's office in Putnam Hall.

Missy Heller, senior in food service and Derby worker, said she recommends that other food-service majors take the opportunity to get a head start on their careers.

"This is going to help me a lot with my future job," Heller said. "I've gotten an opportunity to work with sanitation, and I now have some experience with presentation. It's definitely a good idea if you are planning on doing this later on," Heller said.

However, Molt said she recommends working at the dining centers to all majors.

Fat buster may work only on mice

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A natural fat-buster that made headlines last month for slimming down overweight mice may not do the same for obese people, new research suggests.

Scientists found evidence that fat people already have high levels of that substance in their bodies, maybe 20 to 30 times the amount found in slender people.

So injecting more may not help at all, researcher Bradford Hamilton said.

But another scientist who studies the substance disagreed, saying the new findings may just mean that the obese need more of the stuff than other people to control their weight.

The substance, called leptin, is produced by fat tissue. Mouse studies suggest it is a messenger to the brain that lets animals keep a relatively constant weight.

The more fat on an animal, the theory goes, the more leptin it produces and the more reaches the brain. If an animal gets too obese, an excess of leptin signals the brain to curb appetite and burn off fat.

Scientists said many processes, biological and social, influence obesity, and leptin is not the total answer.

Last month, scientists reported experiments with mice that were grossly overweight because they could not make leptin. When the animals were injected with leptin, they slimmed down dramatically.

The studies looked at levels of activity of the obese gene that makes fat tissue create leptin. The more active this gene, researchers reasoned, the more leptin is being made.

BANK

"Banks are under severe pricing and competitive pressures. That's the driving force behind all the mergers," Charles Vincent of PNC Securities Corp. in Pittsburgh said. "This is very much an in-market merger, and they can reduce a lot of expenses."

But consumer advocates weren't as optimistic. Mergers often lead to less competition, higher fees and loan rates and increased inconvenience from branch closings, Brobeck, of the Consumers Federation, said.

New York City's Public Advocate, Mark Green, said reduced competition from bank mergers is partly responsible for the sharp increase in bank fees and minimum account balances over the last decade.

The Chase-Chemical merger, a stock swap subject to regulatory and shareholder approval, is expected to close by April 1996.

The new company will retain the Chase Manhattan name long associated with the Rockefeller family and its vast global operations. Chase's roots go back nearly two centuries and Chemical's almost that long.

Chase, whose chief executives over the years included David Rockefeller in the 1960s and 1970s, has more name recognition and a greater cachet, especially overseas.

"We are seizing upon a truly unparalleled opportunity to create a premier global financial services company," Shipley said.

A recent report by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that murder was the second-leading cause of death on the job for postal workers and third for all workers.

On July 9, a postal worker was accused of killing his boss at a mail processing center in City of Industry, Calif. On March 21, a former postal worker killed four people and wounded another at Montclair, N.J.

One of the two people wounded Tuesday, a 46-year-old man, was in critical condition at Lutheran General Hospital with two gunshot wounds in the chest, the hospital said.

A 41-year-old man was being treated for a gunshot wound to the neck at Northwest Community Hospital in Arlington Heights, a hospital spokesperson said. The man was conscious and in stable condition.

K-State bell relocated to Bluemont

The original K-State bell called students to classes more than two decades ago, and now it will be displayed in front of Bluemont Hall.

"People will be able to walk beside it, under it and through it," said Gerry Carter, director of Facilities Planning and University architect.

More than 7-feet high and 11-square-feet wide, the bell tower is being constructed near Bluemont and funded by new and old donations, Carter said.

The project is expected to be completed by the end of October, he said.

"We're reusing existing elements of the campus that prior classes have given us and we've had in storage for years," he said.

The structure will be supported by four light poles donated by the classes of 1911 and 1912.

The poles were recovered from a hay field near Manhattan.

The poles will hold the bell just above the heads of students, Carter said.

"The donors wanted the bell to be at a level where it's just going to be above the heads of people," Carter said.

Students will be able to look at names inscribed in the interior of the bell, he said.

Plaques on the structure will recognize the College of Education, Chimes Junior Honorary, a private donor and others who made the project possible.

One woman, whose husband was a creative writing professor in the College of Education, loved the idea of a bell calling students to be educated, Carter said.

Although the electronic system now installed at Anderson Hall will still be used to ring for students each hour, the bell tower could ring if necessary, he said.

The bell was originally kept in Bluemont College in the 1860s and was moved to various locations until it was finally placed in Anderson.

In the 1960s, a donor provided electronic bell sounds, and the bell was eventually abandoned in Anderson.

Now the bell is polished and ready to go on display, Carter said.

Services make involvement easier

More than 300 campus organizations call K-State home, but figuring out how to get involved can be a challenge.

"The best place to start is at the Office of Student Activities and Services," said Karen Tryphonas, student activities and services receptionist.

"We provide a listing of all the registered organizations and can give the students a contact once the they find something that interests them. That way they can contact the group directly and get better information," she said.

The Office of Student Activities and Services is on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union.

For students interested in multicultural groups, Dina Bennett, coordinator of Multicultural Student Organization Office, is available in Holton 201.

"We're here to build strong multicultural groups that foster the development of leadership skills for minority students at K-State," Bennett said, "and we want people to get involved."

A good way to get information is to look for fliers that groups hand out, she said.

"Each organization will have fliers out so keep an eye open. They're an easy way to get information quickly," Bennett said.

The Alliance Newspaper, which comes out once a semester, also provides information and a chance to get involved with multicultural groups, Bennett said.

Students can also get involved in religious groups offered at the University.

"Students are faced with a lot of choices right away. They need to make choices about what's important to them," said Bob Anderson, campus minister of Baptist Student Union Christian Challenge.

BSU meets at 7 p.m. every Thursday in the Little Theatre, where additional information about the organization will be available.

"What we provide at BSU are values that we hope everybody will embrace," Anderson said.

Students will have another chance to see what clubs are available at the Activities Carnival sponsored by Union Program Council. Organizations will have tables throughout the Union with information about their groups.

K-State & U.S.N. working together for more efficient transportation

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

K-State's dedication to developing alternative sources of power for vehicles has been noticed again.

Sixty U.S. Navy mechanics will train at K-State this month and in September learning to diagnose and maintain vehicles that run on natural gas, according to a Navy press release.

"K-State was picked because of our national reputation for work with the electric vehicle program at the national level," Jim Hague, director of electric and hybrid vehicles, said.

Western Resources Inc., Topeka, will provide the instruction in cooperation with K-State's Division of Continuing Education.

Wade Graves, manager of research and development for Western Resources, said the military is required by the Energy Policy Act to use a percentage of alternate fuel vehicles beginning in 1996.

The federal government, state governments and fuel providers, like Western Resources, must abide by the Energy Policy Act as well.

The natural gas engines produce fewer harmful air pollutants than gasoline engines. When tested, the natural gas engines produce only one-fifth as many emissions as the gasoline engines, Graves said.

In the future, many civilians will be driving natural gas powered vehicles. Some cars are already available from the factory with natural gas powered engines including Taurus and Crown Victoria, he said.

"I think in 1996 you will see about 1,000 natural gas vehicles in the state of Kansas," Graves said.

Roger Hundley, fleet mechanic for Western Resources, said the vehicles get about the same gas mileage and have only a very minute power loss.

The power loss is not much, he said, because he races a drag car powered by natural gas that can go 143 miles per hour and run a quarter mile in 9.3 seconds.

The conversion of a gasoline engine to a natural gas engine costs between $2,500 and $3,500. The vehicles can either be made to use both natural gas and gasoline or solely natural gas.

Natural gas vehicles are going to gain in popularity as soon as an infrastructure is set, Hundley said.

One hundred fuel stations per year are beginning to sell natural gas. The stations that have natural gas are not to hard to find, although some states have more than others, he said.

As the infrastructure is set in place, many brand new cars and trucks will be made available with the natural gas engines, Hundley said.

Kansas Turnpike toll collection made easier

Holly McConkey
staff reporter

Travelers using the Kansas Turnpike will soon be able to pay their tolls without stopping.

An electronic toll collection system, called K-TAG, is tentatively scheduled to begin operating later this fall.

K-TAG is a prepaid toll system that will electronically record customers exit and entrance onto the turnpike. The system will allow drivers to pass through the toll gate and have the toll automatically deducted from a prepaid account.

"This changes the way we have run the turnpike for the past 40 years, but I hope it will offer our customers a better value and more convenience," Michael Johnston, Kansas Turnpike Authority president and CEO, said.

Vehicles with a K-TAG tag will have to slow to 20 mph when moving through the specially marked lanes. At this speed, the radio signal from the tag will open the gate and record the appropriate fare.

Two K-TAG customer service centers opened earlier this month, one in south-central Topeka and one in east Wichita, where turnpike customers can purchase their K-TAG tags, with a minimum deposit of $40.

The $40 deposit gets the customer two tags. Additional tags will require a $20 deposit. There will be a $1 per month charge for each tag to help cover administrative costs.

K-TAG customers who maintain a positive balance in their account will receive a 10 percent discount from the regular fare.

K-TAG system costs $6.7 million but is not expected to cause debt for KTA.

"We have been planning for it. We are using money we have already set aside," said Jeremy Hubbard, public relations aid for KTA.

There are expected to be some traffic delays and confusion when K-TAG first opens.

"We will have our share of problems. Any new program does. They will just be growing pains," Johnston said.

"The transition period when the system is first up and running may cause some additional congestion as our customers are getting use to the system," said Lisa Callahan, director of public relations for KTA.

Hubbard said the implementation of K-TAG is not expected to cause any job loss right away.

New name, mission in store for K-State Information Center

▶ K-State Information Center is getting a new name and mission. Will this reincarnation be any better than K-State Infomation Center or U-LearN? See Page 4 for the Collegian's editorial board ideas.

Melissa Hoyt
staff writer

The K-State Information Center has closed and will be reopening under a new name and mission.

The center, formerly U-LçarN, will open its doors sometime in October.

The center will no longer be answering trivia questions or giving out phone numbers.

"We are going to continue the program under a new name and a new mission," said Michael Lynch, vice president of education and personnel development.

The new mission of the information center will be to offer academic and career information.

"Information available will be things like how to get in touch with your adviser, how to find out who your adviser is and such," Lynch said.

Lynch said students looking for the answers to trivia questions and the telephone numbers of other students will have to call elsewhere.

"We hope to have the program up and on-line by October," Lynch said.

The exact date and name of the new information center have not been determined yet and will be announced at a later time.

ASSISTANCE

▶ Students needing the phone number of another student can call the registrar's office at 532-6254. Assistance finding other telephone numbers can be found on campus by dialing 0, off campus by calling 532-6011. These calls are handled by K-State Telecommunicaitons.

Before the new center is opened, general information questions can be directed toward campus departments or student services.

Lynch said he expects some callers to ask trivia and phone number questions that were answered by the old system, but people will be referred elsewhere for answers.

● See INFORMATION Page 12

Electronic toll collection to begin

The Kansas Turnpike's new electronic toll collection system, K-TAG, opened customer service centers earlier this month. Turnpike credit card holders have already received information about opening a K-TAG account. Other turnpike travelers can call 1-800-USE-KTAG for more information.

How it works:

▷ An antenna above the lane sends a radio signal to approaching cars. If cars have a K-TAG on their windshields, the tag will send back an account code to the antenna.

K-TAG on windshield bounces back an account code signal

▶ MAN CLAIMS ARGUMENT OVER BAD PASTA LED TO WIFE'S MURDER

BOSTON — An insurance executive was charged with tearing out his wife's heart and lungs and impaling them on a stake in a fight about overcooked ziti.

Richard Rosenthal was arrested Tuesday and charged with murder after he followed a couple home and tried to engage them in a driveway conversation about gun control, police said.

The couple called police, who found Rosenthal's 4-year-old daughter in the back seat of Rosenthal's car, along with a plastic bag full of bloody men's clothing.

Police followed a trail of blood from Rosenthal's stately Framingham house to the woods and found the beaten, mutilated body of his wife, Laura Rosenthal, who had been slit with a butcher knife from her throat to her navel, and her organs had been placed on an 18-inch stake in a nearby garden.

Investigators said Rosenthal, 40, told them his wife had chided him for burning the ziti.

▶ CEREMONY OPENS CONFERENCE

BEIJING — At a lavish opening ceremony, organizers of the largest women's conference ever vowed Wednesday to fight for empowerment and equality. There was no mention of the fact the 18,000 women there may have to fight just to get their message across during the 10-day event.

The gathering of activists from private groups across the globe will discuss domestic violence, jobs, education and other areas where women seek better treatment. It also will seek to influence the U.N. Fourth World Conference on Women, which starts Monday.

The government has placed several restrictions on the conference, which include limiting demonstrations and ordering that the demonstrations not criticize China.

▶ ECONOMY AVOIDED RECESSION

WASHINGTON D.C. — The economy slowed in the spring to its weakest growth in nearly four years but managed to avoid a brush with recession due to a surge in consumer spending.

Analysts said they expect moderate recovery at best for the remainder of the year and did not rule out further interest-rate cuts to stimulate expansion.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that gross domestic product in the second quarter grew at a 1.1-percent annual rate, the worst showing since the early days of the current expansion, which began in 1991.

And in fact, the department said, growth may be weaker using a new system of calculations which the government is phasing in over the next four months.

▶ DRUGS MAY CAUSE ABORTIONS

BOSTON — Doctors can quickly and safely induce abortions at home with a combination of two drugs already on the market for other uses, researchers reported in a study that could preempt the debate over whether to make the French abortion pill available in the United States.

A small study published last October in the Journal of the American Medical Association showed the potential of the new combination. Now a larger study in this week's New England Journal of Medicine demonstrates its safety and effectiveness.

The new approach involves a combination of methotrexate, a widely used cancer drug, and misoprostol, an ulcer medicine. Methotrexate destabilizes the uterine lining, and misoprostol triggers contractions.

Process to speed up loans

James Dierking
staff reporter

K-State's newly adopted direct loan program helped freshmen and sophomores get their money faster this fall.

"For students, the process is simpler," Larry Moeder, director of K-State financial aid, said.

The Federal Ford Direct Loan Program finances student loans through the government, cutting out middle agencies such as banks and guarantee institutions, Moeder said.

"Students won't see any difference in cost. There is no difference except in the service," he said.

Students currently wait about eight weeks for the Federal Stafford Loan Program to be completed, Moeder said.

The new program is expected to take three weeks.

"As we went through the process, I would declare it successful," Moeder said.

The direct loan program, passed by Congress in 1992, is scheduled to take over the current Federal Stafford Loan Program by 1998. Last school year was the first operational year for the program with 104 schools participating.

"The old process needed to be changed," Chris Digregorio, senior in art therapy, said.

The Stafford loan program was very time consuming and complicated, Digregorio said.

> "On Jan. 2, I started and sent the application in, and I'm still waiting for my $2,000 from the state."
> CHRIS DIGREGORIO, SENIOR IN ART THERAPY

"On Jan. 2, I started and sent the application in, and I'm still waiting for my $2,000 from the state."

Only freshmen and sophomores can use the program now, because the University is testing its success rate.

"We wanted to know if the program would work before we totally abandon the other program," he said.

There had to be some type of division on who would get what type of loan, and this is how we decided to do it, Moeder said.

"Twenty percent of the volume in K-State loans is going to be in direct loans, so about 1,800 students will be participating this year," he said.

The current Stafford loan process has also increased in speed because of competition offered by the direct loan service.

"If all this does nothing else, it has been great for an already existing program," Moeder said.

However, despite good comments from school officials and students the program is not favored by everyone.

"Most of the educational community in Washington doesn't like the direct loan program," said Angela Reiff, Educational Policy Research Assistant for Sen. Nancy Kassebaum.

"We don't think it's going to be a good program for long," she said.

Kassebaum, R-Kan., chairs the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which oversees the direct loan program .

"Kassebaum introduced a bill in March that would cap the program at 40 percent," Reiff said.

If passed, 40 percent of student loans would fall under the direct loan program, placing the rest in the current Stafford loan program.

The Department of Education is currently serving only 30 percent of the student loans and has not begun the collection process, Reiff said.

"Of course they're doing a good job at 30 percent," she said.

Democrats have introduced bills to get the program implemented faster, and President Clinton said he will veto any bill that could hurt the program, Moeder said.

Reiff said the Senate's decision to continue the direct lending program and at what percentage it will exist is expected by the end of 1995.

▶ BOSNIAN WAR

Serb forces hurt in attacks

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Sharply raising the stakes in the Bosnian war, the West pounded the Bosnian Serbs with artillery and air attacks Wednesday in hopes of forcing them to make peace. But a top Serb commander said it would take more than that to dislodge their weapons around Sarajevo.

U.N. and Bosnian-Serb sources reported damage to Serb air defense systems, weapons depots and command centers around Sarajevo.

The West's gamble showed early signs of paying off, though one French plane was shot down. Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and a Serb leader in Bosnia talked about continuing talks on a U.S.-proposed peace plan.

The attacks, NATO's biggest assault in its history, could mark a turning point in the 40-month-old war that has tested U.N. and NATO credibility and left an estimated 200,000 Bosnians dead or missing.

NATO and U.N. officials warned the Serbs to stop attacking civilians and return to peace talks or brace for more of the same.

"The world has finally done what it should have done a long, long time ago," said Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, who characterized the assault as "the beginning peace."

But Bosnian-Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, sounded a defiant note, accusing NATO and the U.N. of declaring war. "This is a precedent which could jeopardize world peace and trigger the Third World War," he warned.

Serb commander Gen. Ratko Mladic dismissed a demand by U.N. commander Lt. Gen. Bernard Janvier of France, who said the NATO attacks would continue until Serb heavy weapons are removed from around besieged Sarajevo.

"We are standing on our positions," Mladic told Bosnian-Serb TV. "We will not be the first to fire, but we will respond to every attack."

The bombing raids began around 2 a.m., Wednesday. Capt. Jim Mitchell, a spokesman at NATO headquarters in Naples, Italy, said at midnight that they were still underway.

Late Wednesday afternoon, a French Mirage fighter jet was shot down near the Bosnian-Serb stronghold of Pale, east of Sarajevo. Its two crew members were seen parachuting from the burning plane, but their fate was unknown.

"Find the pilots! Find the pilots!," Karadzic shouted from the window of the Bosnian-Serb television building in Pale.

Bosnian-Serb security sources later claimed the crew members were captured, but France said it couldn't confirm that.

Three Spaniards, peace monitors for the European Union, were killed along with two other people near Sarajevo, Spain announced. Bosnian-Serb radio said they died in the air attacks, but a Spanish official couldn't confirm that.

EU Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek, said he couldn't rule out the possibility the five were taken hostage and killed Monday by the Serb rebels.

Bombs hit the Bosnian-Serb army barracks in Pale, and a thick plume of smoke hung over the town. U.N. officials said Serb munitions factories and depots in at least three locations around Sarajevo were apparently destroyed.

In addition, Bosnian-Serb sources said an air defense command center on Mt. Jahorina, south of Sarajevo, was destroyed.

NATO and U.N. officials said their attacks were limited to military targets, but Bosnian-Serb officials claimed there were unspecified civilian casualties.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin condemned the widespread NATO bombing raids. But Italian Foreign Minister Susanna Agnelli said Russia, one of five members of the international negotiating group trying to end the Bosnian war, had agreed to the attacks.

The raids also were punishment for a mortar attack Monday blamed on Serbs that killed 37 people in a crowded Sarajevo market.

The West was taking a calculated risk that the retaliation wouldn't derail peace talks.

The attacks were intended to " modify Bosnian-Serb behavior to make them think again about using military force and return to the negotiating table," Jamie Shea, spokesman for NATO Secretary-General Willy Claes, said.

Momcilo Krajisnik, the leader of the Bosnian-Serbs' parliament, said that despite the NATO bombing, there are big chances for the continuation of the peace process.

Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic agreed. The Balkan powerbroker, whose influence is necessary to make a deal, said a U.S.-backed peace plan for Bosnia creates a real perspective for peace.

Milosevic sparked the violent breakup of Yugoslavia four years ago.

But suffering under a trade embargo, Serbia has been putting pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to make peace. This week, the Bosnian-Serb assembly agreed to accept a U.S.-backed peace plan as a "basis for negotiation."

On Wednesday, Milosevic met into the evening with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke, who arrived in Belgrade for talks as U.S. warplanes bombed Bosnian-Serb positions.

"We are on a mission of peace in a moment of war," Holbrooke said before talks began. "The time is ever more urgent."

K-State Information Line fails by comparison

Reasonable funding is, at present, unavailable and no options exist to procure this funding.

Funding for the K-State Information Center should be completely axed.

If we can't provide effective funding for the service, there are only two possible choices.

The first is to increase the funding for the program.

The second option is to completely eliminate the service.

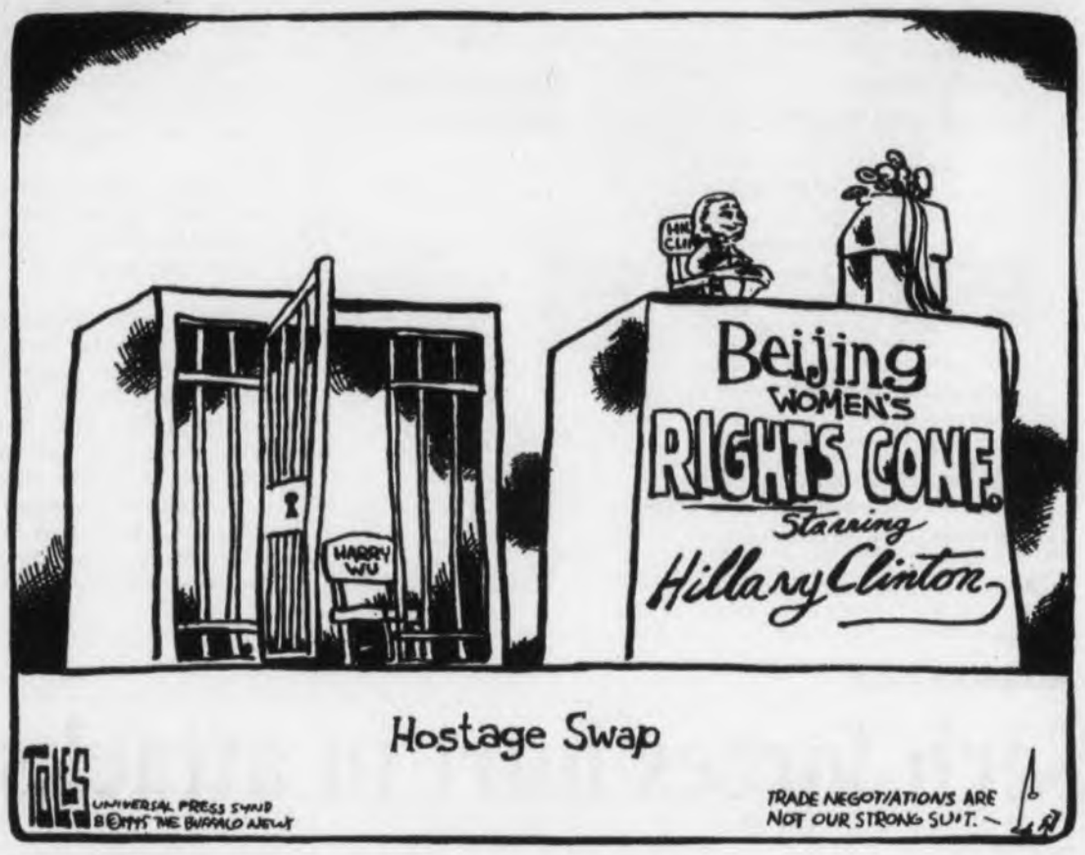
This is the most realistic avenue to pursue because the present service is inadequate for the needs of students.

KSU Information, formerly U-LearN, is a good idea, and if it were properly funded it would most likely work.

Reasonable funding is, at present, unavailable and no options exist to procure this funding.

K-State Information Line received about $8,000 from Student Senate last year. Their research facilities were far from par, and many times students would get an answering machine when they called information.

While information that the service provides is extremely helpful, it is repetitive. Other sources exist on campus to obtain information of this nature, such as the library or Career Planning and Placement Service.



The University of Kansas has an information line that works excellently at giving students what they need.

But in order to do this, KU's information line also has a substantially larger budget to work with. (The figure of their yearly budget was unavailable at press time.)

However, if interested parties care to find out how much more interested KU is about informing their students, the number for their information line is (913) 864-3506.

They'll be able to tell you who to contact.

Conference pushes inequality

In a move reminiscent of dozens of other political maneuvers executed by other communist nations in order to gain a concession from the West, and more specifically, the United States, China recently released human rights activist Harry Wu. Speculation abounded that his release was part of a bargain made in order to secure Hillary Clinton's presence at the upcoming U.N. Women's Conference in Beijing.

While both the White House and the Chinese deny this, it appears as a somewhat suspicious move. Consider that the conference begins on Monday and Harry Wu was suddenly released after a two-month detention during which most of his other rights were denied. Also consider that Jimmy Carter had not yet tried to obtain his release.

COLUMN
JEREMY STEPHENS

While I am enthused about the release of a wrongly kept political prisoner, I am convinced that there were ulterior motives at work; namely, that the Chinese knew the conference would not be considered legitimate without the presence of an American delegation. Secondly, I am concerned about the policy of the Clinton administration in regards to giving legitimacy to a conference on women in a country that has about the worst human rights records since Josef Stalin, especially with women.

In a statement released shortly after Wu's release, the White House said, "The conference presents a significant opportunity to chart further gains in the status of women, including strengthening families, promoting and protecting the human rights of women, expanding women's participation in decision-making and ensuring access to education and health care." And yes, we are speaking about a conference in China, the land of the free and the home of the brave.

This might also have some validity if it were not for the fact that China's top government officials are almost exclusively male, that China's "family" policy includes penalties for having more than one child, that the human rights of common women, or common men for that matter, are not respected by any measure in China, and there are only a handful of decisions Chinese women make without the influence or the restriction of the government. Under this backdrop, the U.N. Women's Conference will take place in order to celebrate "further gains in the status of women." Is anyone else believing this?

While I applaud the gains that women have made in recent years that give them equal protection under the law, I am concerned that because there is no specific end goal to the women's movement, there is the possibility that some will go too far and make the playing field uneven again.

What will actually occur at the conference is not widely known, and after I sampled four major newspapers that were full of reports of Harry Wu but empty of what policies will be discussed, I am curious why there is such silence. After all, if this conference is a reflection of "the mainstream international women's movement," then roughly half of the population would surely support the actions of this conference.

I can only speculate that the Beijing agenda will resemble the fateful Cairo agenda of last year, during which time there was wide press coverage and much outrage at the grass roots level in this country about attempts to secure a right to an abortion at any time, set quotas, and other ideas that are popular with those in the women's movement, but aren't as popular among women.

While these proposals will not become law if passed by the conference, they are a glimpse at what the women's movement is doing now.

Finally, while I gladly support all attempts to give everyone equal protection under the law, I do not support attempts to go beyond that and tilt the field the other direction, just to make it historically "fair." I believe this conference is the embodiment of an attempt to do just that.

▶ HUMAN VALUE QUESTIONED

Editor,

I find it odd that Kevyn Jacobs, a gay-rights advocate, would believe abortion is justified based on moral relativity, i.e. society defines what is right and wrong.

If society deemed homosexuals unworthy of receiving the same rights as heterosexuals, then does that mean homosexuals should be valued less that other persons?

How could gay-rights advocates claim they are treated unfairly unless they appeal to something other than society's standard?

Is the value of a human merely dependent upon societal opinion? It was a societal standard prior to 1900 that man were of greater value than women.

Does that mean during that time women were lesser than men? Or, have women always been equal with men, and men have been wrong in not granting them equal status?

Only by appealing to an objective moral standard are we able to state something is right or wrong. Dire consequences result when the value of a person is dependent upon societal opinion.

Society's opinion was once that blacks were to be subservient to whites, hence slavery. Another society's opinion was that Jews were inferior to other races, hence the Holocaust.

Jacobs asserts the value of the unborn is determined by its mother. Does that mean our value as humans is dependent only upon our mother's opinion? If my mother stated I was not a human, would I suddenly become a non-person?

Rights should be granted based on what you are, not on anybody's opinion. The value of a person is not dependent on being a Christian, a male, or white.

The value of a person is dependent upon being human. Period. Every person deserves the right to life independent of race, gender, or biological stage of development.

A human zygote is simply at a different stage than an adult. The common thread which binds them is that they are each human beings, deserving of the chance to live their life.

Do the inconveniences associated with an unwanted pregnancy outweigh a human's life? The fetus is not a potential person, but a person of great potential.

Abortion is only justified when carrying the child to term will result in the mother's death. (Pregnancies resulting from rape or incest are unfortunate and difficult situations I do not have the opportunity to address in this letter.)

Am I contradicting myself? Am I saying the need for abortion is relative to the situation? No. When the objective moral standards contradict (i.e., "Should you lie to save an innocent human life?"), you are obligated to follow the higher moral standard.

It is a greater moral good to save an innocent human's life than to tell the truth. Likewise, it is a greater moral good, when a pregnancy will result in the death of the mother, that one would live rather than both dying.

▶ "EVIL", BUT FREE, EMPIRE

Editor,

I am writing in response to Lach Franquemont's blasphemous column on Tuesday. I am sure his research is well thought out, but the content is distorted and a blatant shot at the country we live in.

Franquemont speaks of the United States as an "evil empire" whose sole purpose is money and the support of dictators worldwide.

Furthermore, he suggests this money is used solely to fund genocide and human rights violations.

I strongly disagree that the focus of our government is to murder innocent people. Why not look at this very institution we attend? How many K-State students receive grants, loans or other financial assistance from this "evil empire?"

Moreover, Franquemont is a U.S. Army veteran, as am I, who most likely has his education funded by the G.I. Bill and/or Army College Fund. I would be willing to bet that he does not burn that check in the Union at the end of each month to protest the "evil empire."

Every great nation throughout history has made allies or policies that not everyone would agree with.

Do we not study Greek, Roman and other ancient societies and appreciate their advancements and contributions that helped to better the human race?

In addition, Franquemont may fail to recognize that this "evil empire" gives him the freedom to state his infelicitous beliefs in any publication willing to print them.

That is a rather nice benefit from a country whose most important task is supposedly funding foreign dictators.

My advice to Franquemont, and others like him, is to take a look at the big picture rather than isolated events.

America is a free country: you are entitled to relocate elsewhere if it is to unbearable for your existence.

▶ UNIONIZATION NEEDED

Editor,

In the Friday, Aug. 25 Collegian, Erin Mansur-Smith wrote "(unionization) is not about money, it is about solidarity."

This statement couldn't ring truer about our efforts at K-State to unify graduate students into a collective voice.

Unionization does not magically create solidarity.

However, unionization can be the vehicle by which graduate students begin to recognize they can share in each other's struggles and accomplishments.

Our efforts to unionize graduate students can only be achieved if they are driven by solidarity.

Graduate students at K-State provide invaluable teaching expertise and faculty support in most departments across campus.

However, the administration, Kansas Board of Regents and the State Legislature continue to place our needs and concerns at the bottom of the priority lists.

In order to bring about a change, we, as graduate students, must begin by recognizing that we are not as alienated in our experiences as it might appear.

We can identify with one another, and our experiences are often similar.

We must first identify the needs and concerns of graduate students, set goals and then pursue those goals in a union of interests and purpose among members of our group.

Building solidarity at K-State among graduate students is of extreme importance for effective action.

Once organized, we can effectively and democratically identify and address our concerns to K-State administration, the Regents and the State Legislature.

Where can we start? It is imperative that all graduate students fill out the survey they will be receiving in the mail in the next few weeks.

The information collected in this survey is crucial in gaining insight into how graduate students are getting along.

The major purpose of this survey is to determine the needs and concerns we have and how those needs and concerns can be handled.

Another way to help is to contribute to our effort. If you would like to assist in the collection of the surveys, please contact any member on the organizing committee listed below.

Females well-received in leadership program

Associated Press

SPARTANBURG, S.C. — Smiles rather than barks from commanders greeted the first students Wednesday to enroll in an all-female leadership program set up to keep women out of the Citadel's corps of cadets.

"I've heard many gruesome details about the Citadel, so I wouldn't even think about trying to go there," Shariah Choice said after she arrived at private Converse College.

Choice, 17, wants to take pre-med courses and go into the U.S. Air Force.

Twenty of the 22 women accepted for the leadership program were from South Carolina, including Choice. One of the lures was the chance for state residents to pay up to only $3,467 a year for a private education. Other students at Converse will pay $13,150.

About half the leadership students had checked in by noon Wednesday, all greeted by smiling Converse officials.

Maintenance crews busily finished gardening near the school's center courtyard as aides guided students to where they could get identification cards or helped them unload their luggage.

It seemed a contrast much bigger than the 220 miles that separates the Citadel and Converse.

The state created the Converse program in May after it was told to set up an alternative to the Citadel for women or admit Shannon Faulkner as its first woman cadet.

Faulkner became a Citadel cadet this month by order of a judge who ruled there was not enough time to review the Converse program before the start of classes at the Citadel.

She dropped out of the Citadel less than a week later after falling ill during hell week, filled with drilling and marching for freshmen ordered about by shouting instructors.

Faulkner cited stress and her isolation as the only woman cadet.

A trial is scheduled for November on whether the South Carolina Institute of Leadership for Women at Converse is acceptable. Converse said it will continue the program for at least four years even if the courts reject it as an alternative.

A similar program at Mary Baldwin College has been created as an alternative to allowing women into the Virginia Military Institute, the only other state-supported, all-male military school in the nation.

The Justice Department has asked the Supreme Court to find the separate-but-equal setup unconstitutional.

▶ GAME REVIEW

CD-ROM thriller loaded with action

Darin Siefkes
contributing writer

Is the thrill gone? Do you yawn at the sight of pit fiends trying to impale you? Do you laugh aloud as fireballs whiz by your head? Are you even bored as the Energizer Rabbit and Barney combine forces to annihilate you?

Fear no more! Interplay has what you need in "Descent."

The plot is simple: Robots have taken over mines, and you must take your experimental craft to the middle of the mines and blow up the fusion reactor, which will destroy everything in the mine.

Once you blow up the reactor, you must high-tail it out of there before everything blows.

Sounds simple, right? The catch is that the computers have locked the doors, and you must find the keys while modified mining robots try to blow you out of the ground.

"Descent" is one of the first games to allow full 360-degree rotation. So along with forward, back, left and right, the normal directions, up and down, both have been added. This is done so well one can fly on the ceiling for the entire game.

Action wise, this game will throw as many monsters at you as you can handle — and then some. Its difficulty setting doesn't affect how many monsters that appear, but it does change how much each hit will hurt you.

Its' sound support is good with nice background music and mediocre sound effects. One annoying thing: You will hear a computer-generated voice if you cheat and during a couple important spots in the game.

Sound is the weak point of "Descent." But with all the action it puts out, you'll barely notice.

Using the "Doom" run-time simulator, "Descent" continues to push the envelope for the hardcore game players and newbies alike. You thought "Doom" had sweet graphics? "Descent" takes a step forward with its realistic-looking killer robots stalking you at every turn.

It has simple controls on the keyboard, mouse or joystick very similar to its predecessors like "Doom" or "Wolfenstien-3D," or you can customize it to your personal taste. It also provides support to run Logitech's Cyberman controller, with every different programmable option.

It contains seven levels and a limited array of weapons that can be played for free. The full version can be purchased new for about $35 and used for about $25. It contains 30 levels, new weapons and monsters that you can't get in the shareware version.

Some extras that you can pick up for free on the net will allow you to play with up to seven other people on the Internet or modify and create your own levels. Patches are also available to add spice once you get bored with the same old game.

Continuing with the "Wolfenstein" tradition, "Descent" has cheat codes that makes the game a lot easier — for a price. You cannot score points after you cheat, and it will continually call you a cheater just to annoy you.

Though it never received the hype that "Doom" or "Doom II" received, Tom Mahoney, owner of Game Guy video games, called it one of his most popular CD-ROM games.

Its moderate popularity has created several homepages on the net for help, along with an IRC talk channel, and its own newsgroup.

"Descent" is a game I highly recommend.

Judge drops charges, calls suicide assistance trial

Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — A judge dismissed murder charges Wednesday against Dr. Jack Kevorkian in the 1991 deaths of two women, then ordered him tried for assisted suicide.

Circuit Judge David F. Breck ruled that Kevorkian could not be tried for murder because there was no evidence he committed a direct act which caused the deaths of Marjorie Wantz and Sherry Miller.

But the judge said there was ample evidence that Kevorkian assisted in their suicides by buying the supplies and setting up the apparatus which killed them.

Assistant Prosecutor Gregory Townsend said he thought Breck's ruling was wrong, but that charges against Kevorkian would be refiled.

"The law is quite clear," Townsend said.

"If one actively participates in the death, then they're liable for murder."

Are you ready for the game?

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

Just when you thought you'd figured out the bowl situation, they've changed the game again.

Last year, the college football world was at the mercy of the Bowl Coalition. The Orange, Sugar, Cotton and Fiesta Bowls worked together, each retaining its conference ties, to try to produce a No. 1 vs. No 2. game.

And it didn't work.

For one thing, conference tie-ins had the potential to thwart a championship game every year.

For example, had Nebraska and Alabama both been undefeated at the end of the regular season, they would have gone to different bowls, preventing any decisive game.

Additionally, Notre Dame had a virtual lock on a big game. As long as the traditional power had the money to buy plane tickets, they were guaranteed to spoil everyone's fun, regardless of their record (witness last year's disappointing season and thrashing at the hands of Colorado).

Now, we have the Bowl Alliance, consisting of the Orange, Sugar and Fiesta Bowls, and a new degree of freedom has swept through college football. The champions of the Southeastern, Big East, Atlantic Coast, Big 8 and Southwest Conferences and one at-large selection will be matched up in the most lucrative manner possible.

(Beginning next year, the Big 12 champion will get an automatic bid, with an additional at-large spot opening up.)

A national championship game will rotate each year from bowl to bowl, beginning this year with the Fiesta Bowl.

Fiesta will get the first two choices of all eligible teams, with the intention of setting up a national championship match-up on Jan. 2.

The Orange Bowl, to be played Jan. 1, will have the 3rd and 5th picks, and the Sugar Bowl, to be played Dec. 31, will choose 4th and 6th.

Conference tie-ins are gone, allowing any team to travel to the best possible bowl. More importantly, the restrictions placed on Notre Dame's eligibility are much more legitimate.

If the Irish are not rated in the top 10 in either the Associated Press or USA Today/CNN poll, another team may be selected.

So, how does this affect you, the devoted Cat fan?

First, it may alter your travel plans. If the Cats win the Big 8 and finish undefeated, we will likely travel to Tempe, Ariz., for the Fiesta Bowl and a shot at the national championship.

Beyond winning the conference, things get a little trickier. All of our bowl agreements were made with the Big 12 in mind, meaning this year, Big 8 and Southwest Conference teams will be in competition for the available slots.

After the Alliance has chosen its representatives, this will be the order of selection and the contracted opponent for the runner-up slots.

1. Cotton Bowl (Dallas, Texas) vs. the higher-ranked team between the Pacific 10 No. 2 and the Western Athletic Conference No. 1.

2. Holiday Bowl (San Diego, Calif.) vs. the lower-ranked team between the Pac 10 No. 2 and the WAC No. 1.

3. Alamo Bowl (San Antonio, Texas) vs. the Big 10 No. 4.

4. Aloha Bowl (Honolulu, Hawaii) vs. the Pac 10 No. 4.

5. Copper Bowl (Tuscon, Ariz.) vs. the WAC No. 2.

Second, and most important, the Alliance will change the way you celebrate a K-State score.

Oranges are out. Not only are they hazardous to coaches and cheerleaders, they can cause serious damage to musical instruments. Besides, we don't want to go to the Orange Bowl.

Tortillas, on the other hand, are in.

Tortillas are an all-purpose implement. One can buy several packages at a minimal cost (and by the way, after flight-testing several brands in the news room, I have determined that the Candy's brand burrito size tortilla is the most effective), and can be used for both the tailgate before the game — don't steak fajitas sound good right now — and during the game for celebrations.

They fly like frisbees, and should have no problem making it to the field, sparing the band a great deal of emotional anguish.

Finally, tortillas are low-maintenance.

To confirm this, I contacted sports information at Texas Tech, where fans routinely toss tortillas.

"You really don't have to clean them up, because the birds will eat them," said Sheila Tucker, from Texas Tech's sports information.

And don't be worried about seeming unoriginal. K-State can still be the first place where tossing tortillas is a standing tradition.

"It's not really a tradition down here," Tucker said. "It's just a few goofy individuals."

But here in Wildcat Land, we have more goofy individuals than anywhere else.

Folks, it's time for a new K-State tradition. Bring your tortillas to the game, and let them soar.

Wildcats look to freshman to improve

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

After the disappointment of last season's kicking game, Coach Bill Snyder has found a solution.

"I really like James Garcia. At this point in time, he's our No. 1 punter," Snyder said.

Garcia, a freshman from Victoria, Texas, has been unofficially anointed as the surprise of the preseason. Garcia came into camp and promptly kicked his way into the starting lineup for Saturday's opener against Temple.

Last season the Wildcats' punting game was last in the Big 8, nearly nine yards per punt behind Nebraska's punters.

That would lead many to think Garcia was aware of this when he committed to K-State instead of several Texas schools.

"Not really," Garcia said. "I came over here for the program. I wanted to win and I know this program has the capability of winning."

In high school, the 6-foot 2-inch Garcia was named all-district, all-South Texas, all-area and all-state as both a punter and a place-kicker. He averaged 42.9 yards per punt (K-State's punters averaged 32.5).

The 'Cats are also strong with Mike Lawrence, Jimmy Dean, Eric Hickson and Andre Anderson returning kickoffs and Mitch Running and Chris Canty returning punts.

That leaves the place-kicking duties.

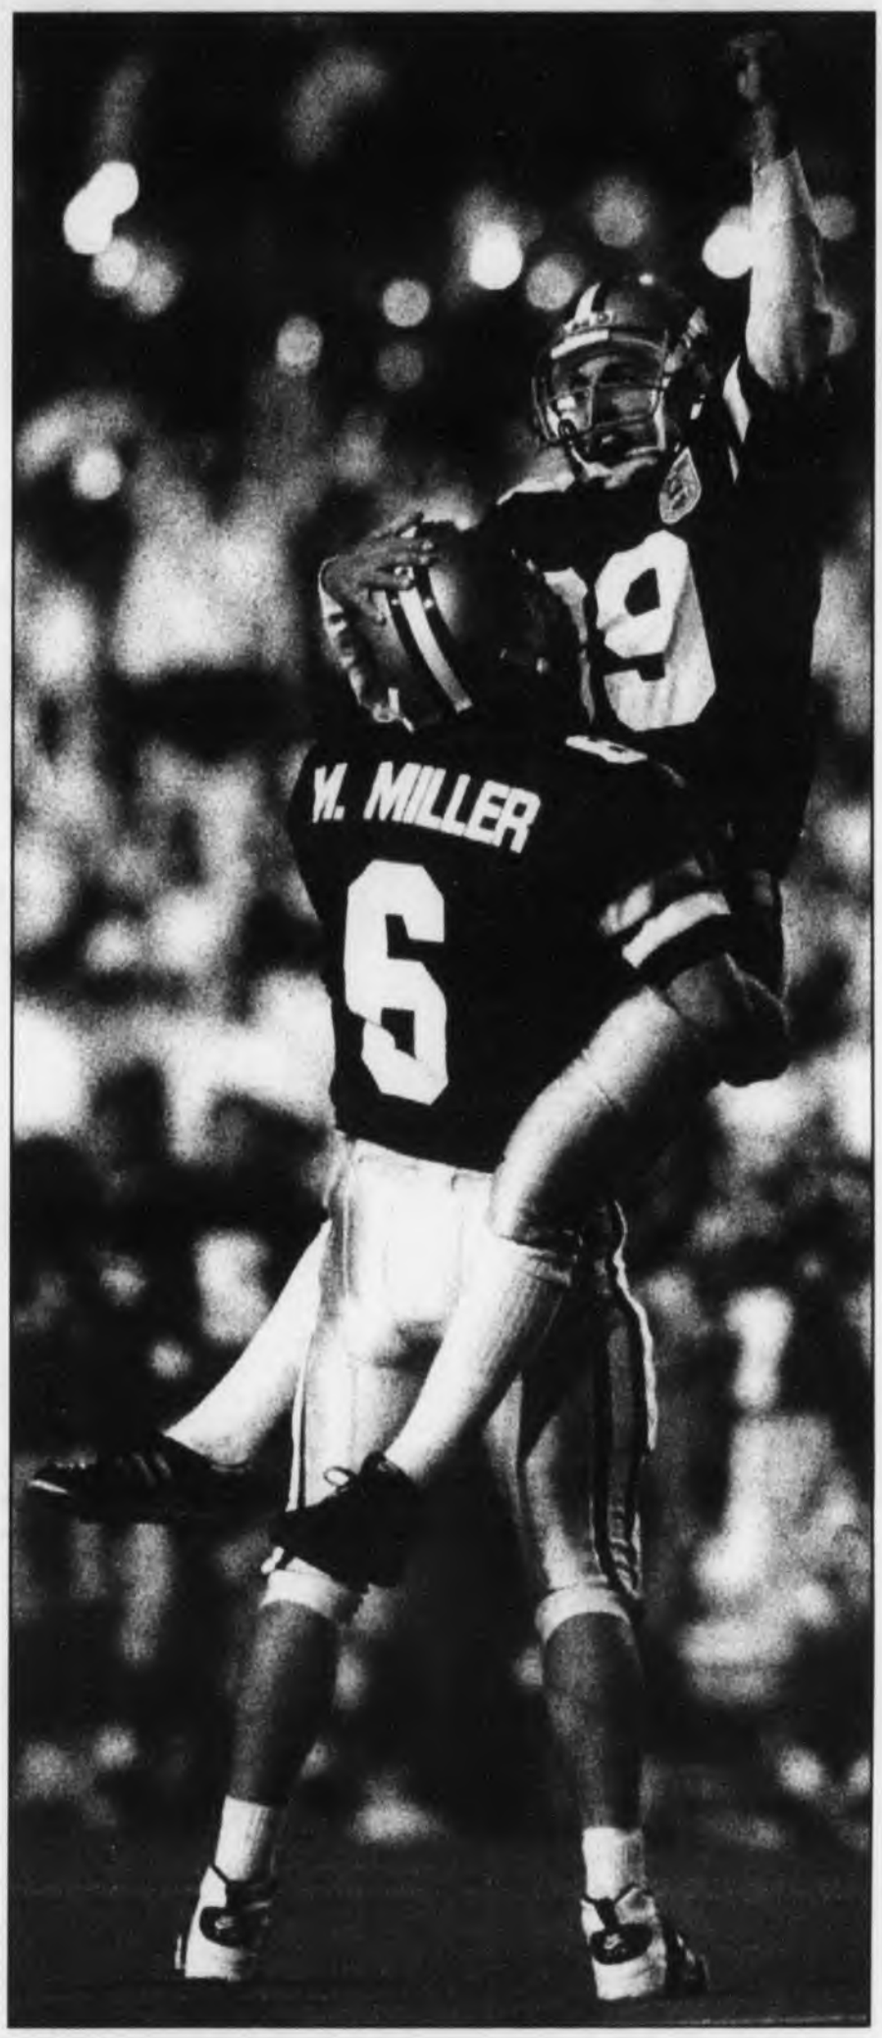
Last year's regular place-kicker, Martin Gramatica, is battling Scott Collins, last year's kickoff man, for the job. Snyder said both will receive action Saturday night.

Last season, Gramatica, as a true freshman, connected on 38-of-39 extra points and hit six-of-nine field goals, but only made one attempt from over 27 yards out. Gramatica misfired on kicks from 37, 40 and 42 yards last season, but said he will be able to get those through the uprights this season.

"I'm more confident with the long field goals this year," he said.

Collins, also a sophomore, kicked off 60 times last year (24 for touchbacks).

In the spring game, the Kansas City, Mo., native kicked field goals of 52 and 25 yards. Collins' length in that game and during fall practice led Snyder to hint he may use Collins on long field goal attempts this season in addition to kicking off.



The competition between Gramatica and Collins should benefit both players in the long haul.

"I think I'm better than last year," Gramatica said. "I'm more confident."

That includes kickoffs, although Gramatica won't kickoff on Saturday.

"I'm doing pretty good," he said. "It's very important because, first, you don't have to go tackle the guy and if he runs it out, he's usually stopped before the 20."

Gramatica said he isn't uptight by the impending decision by the coaching staff.

Academics for K-State student athletes is improving

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

Members of the NCAA Self-Study Academic Integrity Subcommittee met in the Union yesterday, hoping to hammer out the details of a plan to improve the graduation rates of K-State student athletes.

The committee considered admission requirements, academic support services and post-eligibility follow-up.

Because admission to K-State is open to all Kansas graduates, the NCAA academic eligibility standards are substantially stricter than the University's.

"All athletes across the country are sent through the NCAA clearinghouse to determine that they meet the tests and the core requirements," Dick Elkins, director of undergraduate admissions, said.

"People say that makes a level playing field, giving consistency as to what is a core course and what is not."

Once students enter the University, several academic services are available to them, including university-wide counseling and tutoring, programs within their particular college and services provided by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Over the summer, a survey of 15 student athletes was taken to determine whether these services were being utilized.

"Of the 15, four indicated no academic problems," Ray Hightower, assistant dean of engineering, said.

"But 11 reported that they had problems that were resolved outside the athletic department. So they were using the services.

"They had problems, they went to it and they got it resolved even before it had become needed."

K-State also has three programs to help students after their eligibility has expired.

The NCAA Fifth Year program provides financial aid to students who have yet to complete their bachelor's degree. NCAA's Sixth Year program targets particularly deserving student athletes for an additional year of support.

K-State students have taken advantage of both programs, and the athletic department makes its academic services available to these students.

"With Coach Snyder's effort in encouraging students to finish their programs, we have fewer and fewer students with problems," Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director, said.

"And that's where the most trouble is — football and some basketball — most of the other sports graduate in four or five years.

"That's where the Fifth Year program and the Sixth Year programs come in."

Additionally, the K-State Continuing Education Division has established the Second Wind program four years ago. Second Wind helps former student athletes who have left the University without receiving their degrees.

Though the athletic department has had trouble contacting these individuals, three have already finished their degrees.

Bill Feyerharm, chair of the subcommittee, said the University has long sought to address the situation.

"Twelve years ago, we had a horrible record," said Feyerharm, assistant dean of arts and sciences.

"For a long time, we've been expanding staff and getting more support for tutoring.

"But just getting tutoring and throwing money at students won't get the job done."

Though there are still some problems, progress is being made.

"So now we've got academic counselors who work with football and other sports, and we have a full-time staff member who coordinates tutoring and really looks at how students are doing," Feyerharm said.

"Success is not as great as we all would like, but at least it's planted there."

Dear sports editor,

This is in regard to Shane McCormick's column on Tuesday about the Kansas City Chiefs. I am sure that Shane did not mean to belittle or rip on the Chiefs in his column on Tuesday, but I don't think that he understands just how amazing the Chiefs are.

McCormick did make a few valid points, but I fail to see the reasoning behind his article. He's not going to get anywhere by ripping on one of the most talented teams in the NFL.

Joe will still be throwing footballs to his great-grandkids when Shane is on his deathbed. I just hope I can find Shane before the Chiefs vs. Dallas game, I've got a hell of a bet for him!

He'd better tell his Cowboy the Chiefs are coming to show 'em how the west gets won these days!

Two former Wildcats athletes hired to coach at UMKC

Heather Stephanie
staff reporter

University of Missouri-Kansas City recently hired two former K-State students as coaches.

Phil Byrne, a 1992 graduate and former K-State cross-country runner, will be the first full-time cross-country coach at UMKC since the beginning of the school's program in 1988.

Andrea O'Neal, a 1995 graduate and former K-State basketball player, will be a graduate assistant coach for the UMKC women's basketball team.

Byrne ran for K-State in the fall of 1987, then transferred to Johnson County Community College.

He returned to K-State in 1990 and resumed running for the cross-country and track programs, but was later sidelined by a torn achilles tendon. Byrne grduated from K-State in 1992.

"As a runner and because of my injury, I live my life in a sense through the runners. That was the driving force behind my desire to coach," Byrne said.

O'Neal played from 1992-94, averaging 7.3 points per game.

"Andrea brings another quality person to our staff," UMKC women's basketball coach David Glass said.

"Playing at Kansas State, she brings an experienced Division I player to our program. Her time in the Big 8 and her familiarity with the region will serve us well," Glass said.

CORRECTION

■ Yesterday's coaching graphic was incorrectly labeled due to a design error. The story was correct, with the following exceptions: Kevin Ramsey is a defensive line coach, Charlie Coe is offensive coordinator for Pittsburgh, and Jerry Palmieri is strength and conditioning coach for the Jacksonville Jaguars.

Time to be cool

by Nolan Schramm

Maynard Ferguson is coming to town.

The legendary king of brass jazz and three-time Grammy nominee is headlining the 6th-annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival at Sunset Zoological Park on Labor Day.

If you still don't have a clue who he is, Ferguson was the guy who composed "Gonna Fly Now," the theme song from "Rocky," that scored a first for jazz by cracking the pop charts.

Ferguson tours with his Big Bop Nouveau Band nine months out of the year, and he is in his 4th decade as an entertainer. He has also played with Stan Kenton and symphony conductor Leonard Bernstein.

"We were very excited to receive the signed contract in the mail," said Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for the Sunset Zoo.

"This is a rare opportunity for us to have a performer of Maynard's caliber in our community."

Not only will Ferguson play that magical brassy jazz music that made him famous, he will also take time to teach his techniques to thousands of students from across the state after the show.

Bill McFarlin, executive director of the International Association of Jazz Educators, said this is a once-in-a-lifetime experience for youth interested in music.

"We wanted to create a festival with the best the zoo has to offer along with the arts," McFarlin said. "We were kind of mixing disciplines and audiences."

The IAJE created the festival in 1989, and McFarlin said the organization had some brave ideas.

"When we established the festival six years ago, we wanted it to be an educational program to reach out to children," he said.

Bill McFarlin and IAJE were inspired to have an inexpensive, educational jazz show, in concordance with the organization's mission statement.

Sunset Zoo had the same educational goal that year when it obtained a collection of snow leopards, the first exhibit of its kind to visit Kansas.

It seemed only appropriate that a festival showcasing a combination of jazz and snow leopards be given the title "Cool Cats Jazz Festival."

"The thing for students that's really cool is that for three dollars, they can get in to see the legend," McFarlin said. "If they went to see him Tuesday night in Kansas City at the Drum Room, it would cost them $25."

Last year's festival averaged around 4,000 people in attendance, Fenstermacher said. This year, with Ferguson and three other bands playing, attendance is expected to be 5,000 people, she said.

"Our goal was mixing audience awareness together, putting all the interests into one vessel to create a show with real emphasis on educating youth," McFarlin said.

Ferguson will certainly serve as a catalyst for this education, he said.

"He has really been a major contributor to the evolution of jazz," McFarlin said. "Throughout his career, he has had a strong commitment to education."

Many jazz festivals, performances in works

Rebecca Schulz
staff reporter

Manhattan is becoming a definite hot bed for jazz lovers.

The jazz scene is on the rise, with bands playing everywhere from Auntie Mae's Parlor to McCain Auditorium to the Union Station.

New Currents, a music appreciation club on campus, has been working to bring in more jazz acts to Manhattan and provide an outlet for jazz listeners.

"Since I've started to go here, it's grown," said Bryce Berquist, president of New Currents and senior in human resource management.

"There was nowhere to go when I came here."

The club meets twice a month. Most members of the group don't play jazz, but enjoy getting together and listening to compact discs, said Tim Lindemuth, adviser for New Currents.

"We like jazz and we go to jazz performances," Lindemuth said.

This year both New Currents and the K-State music department will be conducting their own jazz festivals.

The New Currents Festival will be in the spring, but a date hasn't been set yet.

The music department has planned the Purple Blues Festival Oct. 29 and the KSU Jazz Festival with Count Basie Orchestra Feb. 3, said Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies and assistant director of bands.

Manhattan residents are a good jazz audience, Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

"There is a moderately good audience for jazz. The attenders are very name oriented," Martin said.

The McCain Performance Series will be bringing two big-name jazz performers to K-State. The Clark Terry Quintet will play at 8 p.m., Oct. 21 and the Joshua Redman Quintet will play at 8 p.m., Feb. 8.

Joshua Redman is a recent graduate of Harvard who turned down Yale Law School for his jazz career.

Clark Terry, a trumpet player, is returning to K-State to perform at McCain's 25th anniversary, Martin said.

Wilson said the jazz orchestra at K-State will be backing Terry for part of his performance.

"Students like to see or hear players who are their own age," Martin said. "I like to hear players who are at the beginning of their careers. They really put a lot of effort into their performances."

Auntie Mae's Parlor, in Aggieville, started providing a venue last year for Wasted Potential, a local jazz band.

"There was a bunch of folks looking for a place to play," Steve Jackman, Auntie Mae's bartender, said.

This year, Wasted Potential will play on Wednesday nights at Auntie Mae's. They will also have blues bands on Thursday nights, Jackman said.

Harry's Uptown has a room available to be renovated for a live music venue.

"We have really nice room available. One idea is a jazz or blues place," owner John Heritage said.

Heritage said the room is still in the planning stages.

United Press International reports that attorney generals from Pennsylvania and New York are hounding the federal government to do something about frivolous lawsuits by prison inmates.

Prisoners in the past have sued because they have to use white towels instead of beige ones. Another inmate claimed he owned all the oil in Pennsylvania and Texas and deserved $700 trillion for all the oil taken without his consent.

One question about prisoners who sue remains: Why don't these guys ever sue when they're forced to be a wife of a 300-pound fellow named Lamont?

Calling it a gee whiz fad. Newsweek reports that drinking one's own urine has come into style in the United States and Great Britain. So-called urotherapists claim urine can be used to cure such maladies as jet lag and tuberculosis. Even Kevin Costner's character in "Waterworld" takes a swig of it himself. London yoga teacher Vedanta Saraswati doesn't seem to understand urine aversion. "Westerners in general are awfully funny about things that come out of orifices," he said. No kidding. But it's true that if it comes out of a beer tap, people will pay to drink urine all night.

The U.S. Postal Service's Board of Governors isn't taking any more crap. The Associated Press reported from now on, any postal employee who brings a gun to work will be fired without hesitation.

"No ifs, ands or buts," said Postmaster General Marvin Runyon.

It's good to know that guy who allegedly shot two of his co-workers at a mail processing center in Palatine, Ill. a few days ago isn't going on unpaid leave while he's in prison.

The Reuter news agency recently reported that an English-skills test administered in the Puttalam district of Sri Lanka included the sentences "Why not do you like this one are?" and "How about this are sir? Will I can give it to you for 300 rupees."

Smart money bets someone from the University of Kansas graduate program in English drew that test up.

A children's baseball team from Venezuela has decided to return to the nudist resort they stayed at last year for the duration of their stay in Davie, Fla. The Associated Press reports the children don't seem fazed by the uniform-undress code at the Seminole Health Club and neither are their parents. Thank God Michael Jackson is in Tokyo.

Thousands of screaming Wildcat fans will converge on KSU Stadium Saturday. While alcoholic beverages are not allowed on the students side, alumni are encouraged to get tanked up in their air-conditioned sky boxes

Media businesses discuss bid to form new company

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ted Turner is weighing an $8.5 billion takeover bid from Time Warner Inc. which sources said would make the brash and fiercely independent Turner second-in-command of the biggest media and entertainment company in the world.

Time Warner and Turner Broadcasting System Inc. confirmed Wednesday they were talking about a stock swap which would bring together Turner's cable networks, including CNN and Headline News, with Time Warner's publishing, music and film businesses.

Sources said Time Warner offered $8.5 billion in stock to make Turner Broadcasting a wholly owned subsidiary. Ted Turner would become a vice chairman of the new company, said one source close to the deal.

"Ted would not be the kingfish, but he'd still be a very significant fish in a much larger pond," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Such a deal would continue a merger frenzy in the media and entertainment industry this summer. Many program producers and distributors are teaming up in the belief that bigger is better.

Just weeks ago, Walt Disney Co. struck a $19 billion deal to buy ABC, and Westinghouse Electric Corp. bid $5.4 billion for CBS.

Turner, a showman who built his father's billboard company into the cable industry's showpiece property, is said to support the deal. That suggests he has abandoned his desire to own one of the Big Three networks, such as CBS.

Some analysts said Turner, a brash businessman dubbed the Mouth of the South, would have a hard time being second-in-command.

"I don't see Ted Turner being interested in sitting through four-hour board meetings at Time Warner in New York," said John Reidy, a media industry analyst at Smith Barney. "You can't work for a company after you've owned it."

Before the deal goes through, Turner must persuade Tele-Communications Inc., Turner Broadcasting's No. 1 outside shareholder, to approve the deal. The Englewood, Colorado-based company, headed by John Malone, wouldn't comment.

Turner holds a majority of the stock in Turner Broadcasting.

But TCI owns about 21 percent, and Time Warner owns about 18 percent. They each have three seats on the 15-member Turner board and individually can veto major deals.

Time Warner had until recently been negotiating to sell its Turner stake back to Turner Broadcasting in an effort to reduce its $15 billion debt. Time Warner had also blocked an earlier effort by Turner to bid for NBC.

Analysts said the Disney-ABC deal drove home the realization at both Turner Broadcasting and Time Warner that they needed to get bigger to compete.

Time Warner's chairman, Gerald Levin, visited Turner at Turner's ranch in Montana earlier this month and outlined his plan to combine the companies.

Some analysts said other bidders could appear for Turner Broadcasting now that Turner has signaled his intention to sell. Among those mentioned are General Electric Co., the parent of NBC, and Rupert Murdoch's News Corp., which owns the Fox network.

An NBC spokeswoman said Wednesday the company still feels a deal with Turner would make sense, while a News Corp. spokesman said his company had no interest in Turner.

Turner built his empire on an outdoor advertising business he inherited from his father.

His 1970 purchase of a single UHF station in Atlanta grew into a global empire that includes the cable channels CNN, Headline News, TNT, TBS Superstation and the Cartoon Network; movie studios New Line Cinema and Castle Rock Entertainment; and baseball's Atlanta Braves and basketball's Atlanta Hawks.

Time Warner owns the nation's second-biggest collection of cable systems; the Home Box Office and Cinemax pay-TV channels; Warner Bros. studios; and Time, People and Sports Illustrated magazines.

Last year, Time Warner was the world's biggest media and entertainment company with revenue of about $15.9 billion.

The Disney-ABC deal would create a company with combined revenue of about $16.5 billion. Time Warner-Turner would have about $18.7 billion.

Sources familiar with the deal said Time Warner is discussing offering 0.7 to 0.8 of a share of its stock for each Turner Broadcasting share.

Based on the value of Time Warner stock when the negotiations were disclosed, the value of the stock swap would be about $35 a share — or $8.5 billion for the rest of Turner.

Time Warner stock fell $1.25 to $41.12 1/2 a share Wednesday on the New York Stock Exchange. Turner's widely traded Class B stock was up $6.50 to $30.50 a share on the American Stock Exchange.

Heroin ruled not final cause of death

Associated Press

SAN RAFAEL, Calif.— Jerry Garcia had used heroin shortly before his death, but in the end, his heart simply gave out from wear and tear.

"He was a 53-year-old man with hardening of the arteries," Gary Erickson of the Marin County coroner's office, said. "This was a mechanical process."

When he died, the arteries that supplied blood to Garcia's heart muscle were so clogged that the openings were the size of pinpoints, Erickson said. Two of the three arteries supplying blood to the heart were 85-percent clogged, the third was 30 percent, he said.

Toxicology tests showed Garcia had used heroin within days of his Aug. 9 death at a rehab center.

"It wasn't contributing toward his death," Erickson said Tuesday.

Test results indicate the guitarist's most recent use of heroin was most likely before the time he entered the rehabilitation facility.

Garcia's heart was damaged when he suffered a diabetic coma in 1986. He failed to follow doctor's orders and was admitted to a hospital again in 1991 for exhaustion.

"He made a commitment to getting well, but unfortunately it came too late," Dennis McNally, the publicist for the Grateful Dead, said.

The Grateful Dead has been one of the nation's most popular concert acts for years, grossing more than $50 million in ticket sales last year.

Judge denies change of Harding's sentence in Kerrigan conspiracy

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Tonya Harding went to court Wednesday to try to change the sentence she received for her role in the attack on rival skater Nancy Kerrigan, but a judge said no deal.

Under her plea bargain, the skater was ordered to donate $50,000 to the Special Olympics and perform 500 hours of community service.

Harding asked Circuit Judge Donald Londer if she could pay the $25,000 she still owes to Loaves and Fishes, an agency that provides meals to the elderly. She also asked the judge to let her out of her remaining 100 hours of community service.

Though Harding got high praise from probation officer Patricia Foley — Foley said the skater was easily a 10 on a scale of one to 10 — Londer said the original sentence was fair.

Harding was placed on three years of probation and ordered to perform community service after pleading guilty last year to conspiracy to hinder prosecution in the January 1994 attack on Kerrigan.

She also was fined $100,000 and ordered to pay $50,000 to Special Olympics and $10,000 in court costs.

The U.S. Figure Skating Association banned Harding for life for helping cover up the attack and stripped her of the championship she won last year in Kerrigan's absence.

Harding admitted to plotting a cover-up after the attack but denied knowing about it beforehand.

Pointing the finger: More observations on live-music scenes

COLUMN

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Remember last year's DB92 Welcome Back Concert?

More than 700 people showed up to hear God's Favorite Band and Kill Creek, as well as other bands. There were booths set up by local-community groups trying to reach the public. The local shire of the Society for Creative Anachronism put on mock medieval battles between performances.

What happened this year? Not only were SCA and the community groups practically non-existent, the concert's attendance was around one-third of last year's.

Did KSDB-FM 91.9 promote the show well enough? Was it too hot? Or, perhaps, DB92 was facing competition from another show a little ways down the Kaw River.

It's entirely possible that the low turnout of this year's show might have been due to a combination of all of these factors. But for the sake of speculation, consider what was going on last Sunday in that parallel universe called Lawrence.

People were being charged $12 each (plus various and sundry Ticketmaster fees) to attend the first Jayhawk Music Festival at Clinton Lake outside of Lawrence. Included in the bill that day were the Reverend Horton Heat, Stick, Grither and the Urge. That's quite an appealing line-up.

According to the Kansas City Star, more than 7,000 people showed up for the outdoor show. According to Collegian estimates, the Welcome Back Concert peaked around 250 this year.

That means the Jayhawk Music Festival attracted something like 28 times more people than the Welcome Back Concert, grossing at least $84,000 in ticket sales alone.

It's easy to attribute these differences to Lawrence's proximity to Kansas City and its consequential ability to draw an audience from such a large metropolitan area.

But such reasoning really misses the point.

Lawrence clubs have live rock music almost every night of the week because University of Kansas students consistently show up and pay to hear bands.

In fact, Lawrence clubs with disc jockey entertainment are, if not exceptions, certainly not typical-Lawrence fare. But in Manhattan, this form of entertainment is the norm.

Many of the bands that played at the Jayhawk Music Festival will soon or have recently played in Manhattan. Will the Manhattan crowds for these shows swell into the hundreds?

Don't hold your breath.

Those in Manhattan who enjoy live music are used to driving to Lawrence to hear and see it. This might have happened on Sunday, but there's more to it than that.

Simply put, the way things are right now, most people in Manhattan will go to Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon and listen to Pat Benatar for free rather than go to a free rock concert or, God forbid, pay a few bucks to see a band.

This less-sophisticated level of popular taste does nothing to help this town's Philistine reputation.

Then again, since when did anyone even care?

Museum goes out of business, sells wide variety of exhibits

Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's a once-in-a-lifetime chance to put a statue of the World's Tallest Man in the middle of your living room — if you have 9-foot ceilings.

A dilapidated Guinness Book of World Records museum is going out of business, and its exhibits were up for sale Wednesday, giving patrons first crack at its bizarre inventory.

The museum, an Empire State Building fixture for 19 years, will be permanently closed after Labor Day, taking its quirky collection along.

"The end of an era," proclaimed a cardboard sign near its ticket booth. "Inquire inside for the price of your future Guinness memorabilia."

That includes a plastic replica of Krystyne Kolorful, the world's most tattooed lady. Or a genuine photo of the largest baked pizza in U.S. history — with a diameter of 100 feet, 1 inch. Or the headless statue of the world's tallest man, Robert Wadlow, who was 8 feet 11.1 inches tall when he died in 1940 at 22. (Guinness is keeping the head for trademark reasons.)

Just make a bid; nothing has a price tag. "We're not that tacky," said Paul Burns, who's overseeing the sale.

"It's tacky enough already," said Leslie Batnick, taking a lunchtime tour with his two sons. There was nothing in the exhibit that inspired him to start writing checks.

"The kids might get a kick out of taking home the tattooed lady, but I don't think so," said Batnick, standing beside a statue of the world's fattest man, 1,069-pound Robert "Earl" Hughes.

Yury Konev, 18, was examining a collection of shovels honoring the gluttonous work of Pete Dowdeswell, who holds the following eating records: 22 meat pies in 18 minutes, 13 seconds; 21 hamburgers in nine minutes, 42 seconds; one pound of raw eels in 13.7 seconds; 13 raw eggs in one second.

See anything you like, Yury?

"I'm not interested in buying," the Rider College freshman said, puzzled by the concept of somebody actually buying the shovels. "I'm just looking around."

The sale was announced after the Ripley Entertainment Corp. — the believe-it-or-not folks — took over in February.

Ripley decided to close the current exhibit and open a modern, interactive Guinness museum, Burns said. A new site in the city has not yet been determined.

Still, there are some nicer items for sale: a copy of the album "Thriller" autographed by Michael Jackson. A vintage jukebox from the rock 'n' roll section. A 6-foot-high plastic Elvis swiveling around a microphone.

Bids will be taken on the items through Labor Day. On Sept. 7, the winners can come by and collect their booty.

"The money is really not important," Burns said. "It's really just a fun thing."

▶ OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING

DNA test shows origin of left leg

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — The left leg found in the rubble of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building belongs to an unidentified black woman, the state medical examiner said Wednesday.

Defense attorneys for bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh, said the leg might have belonged to the real bomber. The leg was found wearing a size 7-1/2 military-style boot and an olive-drab strap.

The leg belonged to a woman about 5 feet 5 inches tall and between the ages of 16 and 30. The badly decomposed limb did not match any of seven-known victims of the bombing who were missing left legs, Dr. Fred Jordan said.

The official death count from the attack was raised to 169.

"DNA analysis by the FBI has shown conclusively that the left leg is not male but female," Jordan said. He said hair analysis by the FBI had shown the victim was black.

Earlier tests found a 75-percent probability the leg had belonged to a light-skinned male. Jordan's release said the conclusion was based on statistical data for Caucasians.

The leg was broken in two places, Jordan said.

McVeigh and Terry Nichols are the only people who have been indicted in the April 19 bombing.

Both men are being held without bail and could face the death penalty if convicted under federal conspiracy and murder charges.

Their former Army buddy Michael Fortier, admitted to a minor role and pleaded guilty to lesser charges in return for his testimony.

Stephen Jones, McVeigh's attorney, said he was dubious about the new results.

"With this contradictory disclosure, no one can have confidence in any of the forensic work in this case," Jones said. "A white male becomes a black female. No wonder DNA testing has been discredited."

Calls to prosecutors weren't returned.

In the weeks after the bombing, federal agents combed the country in vain for John Doe No. 2, a dark-haired, muscular suspect depicted in sketches distributed by the FBI.

The sketch has not been withdrawn, even though officials have admitted that it resembled an innocent-Army private who was in the rental agency near the time that McVeigh allegedly rented the Ryder truck that carried the 4,800-pound bomb.

Art dispute

■ Deal restricts right to reproduce Picasso artwork

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A deal with a company that puts Pablo Picasso's work on everything from boxers to ties, tightens his heirs' control over reproduction of his art.

The deal, announced Tuesday, ends a 12-year dispute which began after Pablo Picasso's granddaughter Marina sold the right to reproduce images of 234 of his works.

The majority of those rights ended up with Museum Boutique Intercontinental Ltd. of New York, which in 1980 began putting the images on glass, porcelain, clothing and home accessories.

"At the time, this was a new concept within the art world," the company said in court papers. "The art merchandise available previously consisted of postcards, posters and art catalogs."

But the proliferation of Picassos on rings, watches, handkerchiefs, shoes, rugs, paper bags, scarves, mugs and coasters did not sit well with heirs.

The estate's lawsuit was scheduled for a June trial, but the agreement was reached and approved by a federal judge.

While terms are confidential, court documents outlining the deal are public.

It calls for the company to sell off its inventory of Picasso products over the next 18 months with stickers saying, "This product has not been approved by the estate of Pablo Picasso."

Estate lawyer Dorothy Weber said the agreement was necessary in part because of the demand for Picasso merchandise. The artist produced 7,000 works before his death in 1973.

"There's probably no other name of the 20th century that's as well known for an artist," she said. "He was so prolific and had such a vast body of work that really lends itself to being used on a variety of products."

Museum Boutique officials did not return a call for comment.

As part of the deal, Museum Boutique acknowledges that all rights to the Picasso name are controlled by the Societe de la Propriete Artistique et des Dessins Et Modeles, now commonly known as the Society des Auteurs des Arts Visuels or SPADEM.

The French organization protects the intellectual property rights of individual artists worldwide.

Museum Boutique will now only have the right to sell towels, handkerchiefs, tote bags, pillows, paper products and leather jackets in the United States and must renegotiate for rights to all of its products worldwide with SPADEM.

In return, SPADEM agreed it will not license to anyone else the right to manufacture products containing the images from Museum Boutique's collection, except for art books, bibliographic editions, educational uses, CD-ROMs and exhibitions.

Dole seeking to drum up more support

Associated Press

WASHINGTON D.C. — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole will try to firm up conservative support for his presidential bid next week by attacking proposed standards for teaching U.S. history and laying out his ideas on tax simplification, a campaign official said Wednesday.

Hoping to prevent erosion of his front-runner status among Republican presidential hopefuls, Dole also is considering a proposal to require a 60-percent vote of Congress to raise income tax rates, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

In what his campaign sees as a major economic speech, Dole will address the Economic Club of Chicago on Wednesday to outline his principles for simplifying taxes.

With that and an Indianapolis, Ind. speech on Monday, Dole is seeking to assert himself at a time when Congress is returning from summer recess and people may start paying more attention to the presidential campaign.

While most analysts see limited value in polls at this point, Dole has seen his support among Republican primary voters slipping as more people join the undecided column.

Dole's address Monday to the American Legion annual convention in Indianapolis will focus on themes aimed at appealing to conservatives, following up his April speech accusing Hollywood of undermining morality.

He will address the controversy over new standards for teaching U.S. history in schools and is considering endorsing a movement to make English the nation's official language, the official said.

"Later on, if toll collection becomes automated, where a machine issues tickets, then we may cut down on toll collectors," he said.

Callahan said the response to K-TAG is already positive.

As of Aug. 30, more than 1,000 people have signed up for K-TAG.

"Everyone is anxious. K-TAG will be great for students who travel or go home for the weekend," Callahan said.

Amanda Bahner, junior in psychology, lives in Overland Park and often takes the turnpike home.

She said she didn't think she would use the K-TAG program because she only goes home three to four times a semester.

"I think it would benefit business people who travel a lot, but I don't travel a lot. I don't go home very often," she said.

"I hear that the registrar's office is handling an average of 200 calls a day for students' phone numbers," Lynch said.

The center's mission change was partially the result of a change in funding.

"Last year's budget had $7,654 coming from the student activity fee, and the other half was coming from the Educational and Personnel Development Program," Lynch said.

Lynch said the total budget for the program was $16,000, and with Student Senate cutting the fee, the program was cut in half.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said the center has had a problem since 1993-94.

Otto, former Student Activities and Social Services Committee chairman, said the center was brought up for funding in 1993 three times.

"The first two times all funding was cut. Then Student Body President Ed Skoog vetoed it, saying he wouldn't sign it if no money was given to the program," Otto said.

Otto said Skoog's veto held up every allocation for a month and a half.

"Senate finally passed it with the bare minimum," he said.

Otto said as chairman of the 1994-95 SASS Committee, he didn't want to have to go through all that again this past spring.

"Dr. Lynch, the graduate assistant and the SASS Committee sat down before allocations started and decided on a resolution to take to Senate," Otto said.

He said the options were to provide funding, fund it halfway or to cut it completely.

"A lot of people thought it was a waste of money, so we started early in the first semester looking at options for the program," Otto said.

Otto said the final decision was made to cut the funding under the condition that Lynch could reorganize it, and make it an academic center. It could be completely funded through the Education and Personnel Development Program.

natural gas vehicles compare very favorable, Hague said.

The natural gas engines are the cleanest running engines besides electric engines, he said.

Electric engines can not drive as far as gasoline engines while natural gas engines can travel about the same distance as gasoline powered vehicles, Hague said.

"The natural gas vehicles are newer to the transportation field. We got a little lag time, but the technology is there for us," Hundley said.

Football parking fees to increase

J. Scot
staff reporter

The cost of parking at Bramlage Coliseum is increasing for the football season.

"Prices now go up to $5 per car. Buses and RVs are $10," Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage, said.

The price increase was needed for the renovation of the east lot at Bramlage, he said.

"The main problem is underground water leakage is causing the original asphalt to crack," Muller said. "And we've exceeded the life expectancy of the asphalt."

The lots affected by the increase are the west lot, which is off College Avenue, and the east lot and rugby field, which are off Kimball Avenue.

The prices for special events, concerts and basketball games will remain at $3 per car and $8 for buses and recreational vehicles.

"The sole source of the extra money earned is for parking revenue," Muller said.

This summer renovations on the west lot were completed after two years, he said.

Other parking options for games include the K-State Student Union and west of Memorial Stadium, which are free. A shuttle from the parking lots to the games is offered at a cost of $1 each way.

Parking Services will also charge $3 for patrons who want to park at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Lot B-2, Davenport Hall, Veterinary Medicine Complex and Edwards Hall, said Lance Lunsway, supervisor of parking control and Bramlage parking coordinator.

"Now we will be able to give patrons more room for paying $3 or $5 for parking," he said.

"And we will be providing a shuttle service for those who don't want to walk."

Parking Services provided a shuttle service with five rented buses last year, but this year the service is downsizing because only two buses were used during the games.

"This year we'll be running two 15-passenger vans, one of which is wheelchair-accessible, on two separate routes to the stadium. People needing assistance with wheelchairs should call Parking Services in the morning so that the right van is on that route," Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

The shuttles will start running at 4:30 p.m. and will run continuously until 30 minutes after kick-off. Shuttles will resume 45 minutes prior to the end of the game and run 30 minutes after the game is over.

"The shuttles will take students from either the Union or Lot D-1 to gate 11. This is both the pick-up and drop-off point," Archer said.

K-State graduate and Rhodes Scholar Dr. Elaine Hefty Cleary, 39, died of a brain aneurysm Aug. 26 at the University of Colorado Hospital in Denver.

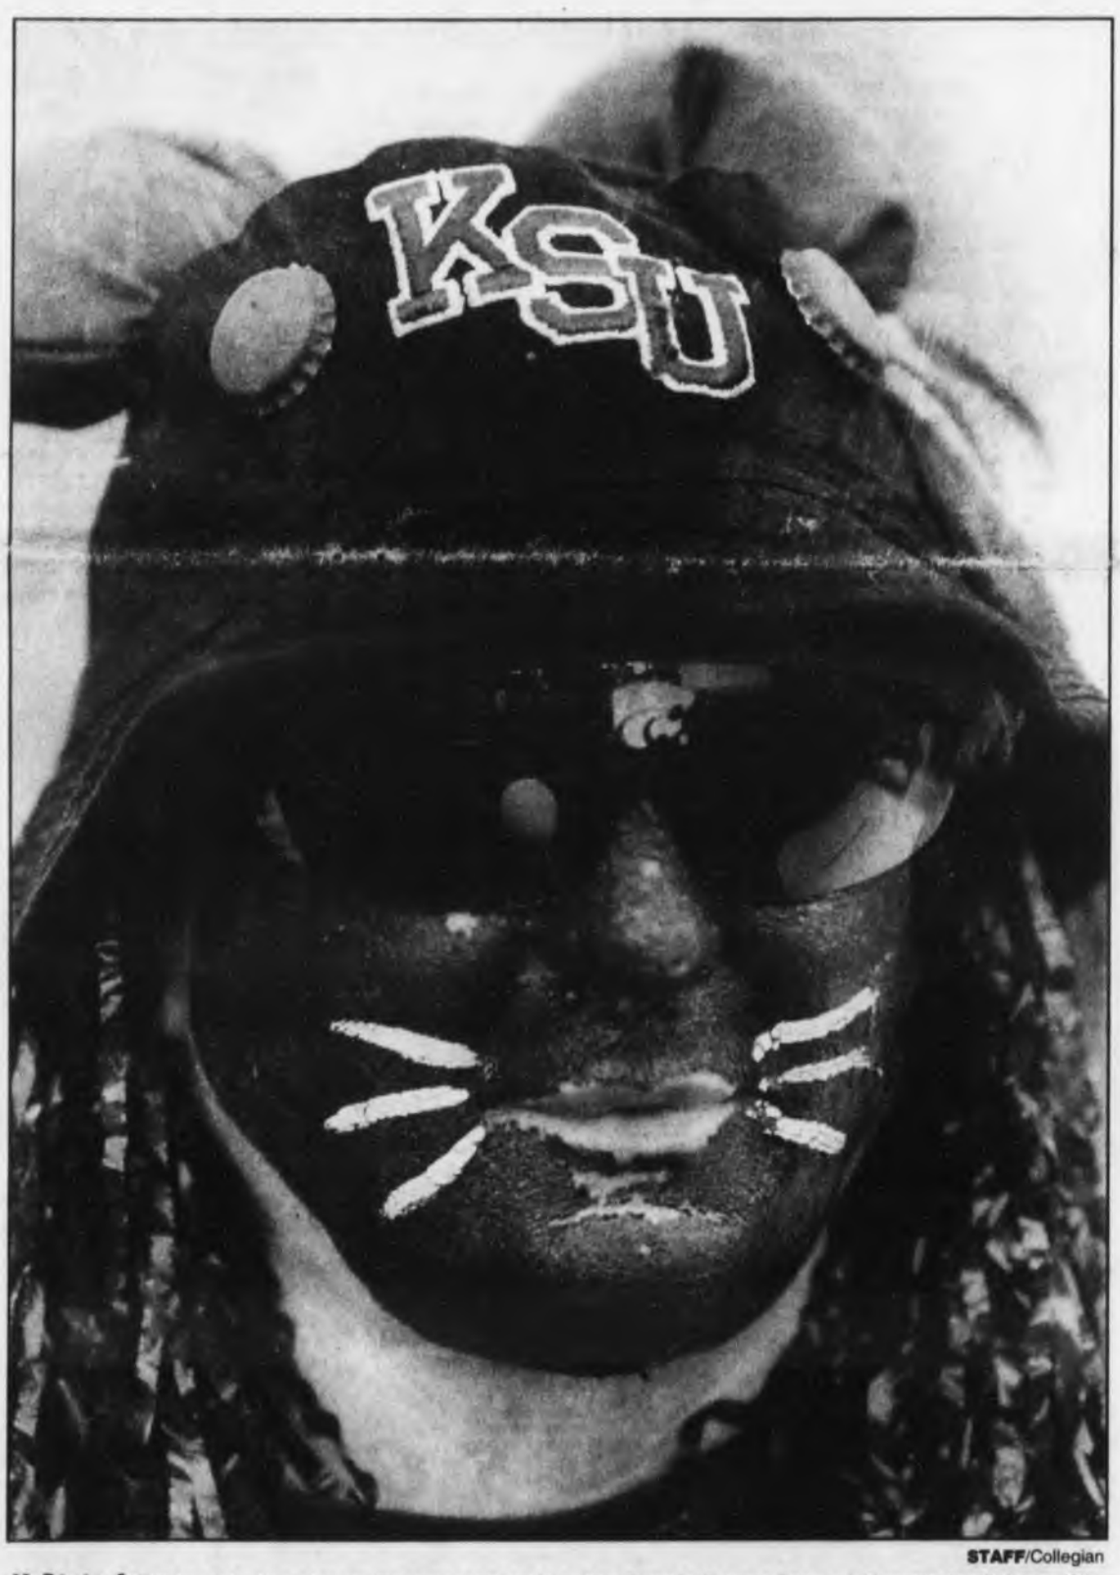
The Valley Falls native graduated from K-State in 1978 and was the second Kansas woman selected as a Rhodes Scholar.

She earned a bachelor's degree in microbiology from K-State and Oxford University, where she studied for two years.

In 1985, at the age of 29, Cleary earned a medical degree from the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore.

At the time of her death, Cleary was an assistant professor at the University of Colorado Health and Sciences Center in Boulder, Colo.

As a practicing physician, Cleary was responsible for providing primary care for indigent patients.



She also taught medical students and residents, according to the Nellis Funeral Home.

Cleary is survived by her husband of six years, Jonathan; her parents, Glenn and Joann Hefty of Valley Falls; two sisters, Karla Hefty of West Memphis, Ark., and Glenda Hefty of Rice Lake, Wis.

She is also survived by two brothers, Keith Hefty and John Hefty of Valley Falls; and a grandmother, Fern Acker of Topeka.

Services will be Saturday morning at the Coal Creek United Methodist Church in Valley Falls. A memorial service will also be Sept. 9 in Boulder, Colo.

State target of lawsuit

Associated Press

A disabled Manhattan man is suing the state of Kansas in federal court, accusing it of failing to ensure that retail stores selling Kansas Lottery tickets are handicapped accessible.

Lewis "Tobie" Tyler of Manhattan filed his lawsuit last week in U.S. District Court in Topeka. The suit names as defendants the state of Kansas, Attorney General Carla Stovall and Gregory Ziemak, executive director of the Kansas Lottery Commission.

"I want to be able to go into a store and shop the same as all other people," Tyler said.

Ziemak said Thursday he hoped to settle the complaint before the lawsuit goes to court.

Tyler alleges the commission has not inspected retail outlets licensed to sell lottery tickets to ensure they comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The lawsuit also accuses the state of knowingly licensing retail outlets that are not accessible to disabled people.

The lawsuit seeks a permanent injunction that would force the lottery to stop selling tickets at retail outlets not accessible to the disabled.

Tyler is a former Waukesha, Wis., policeman who was shot in the line of duty and now uses a wheelchair.

In his lawsuit, Tyler said because every lottery ticket is a possible winning ticket, he is irreparably harmed each time he is denied a ticket at an inaccessible retail location.

"I should not need to have to file a lawsuit," he said. "I have rights under the ADA."

Tyler said he played the lottery often and has been prevented from buying lottery tickets several places in Manhattan because businesses selling the tickets do not have wheelchair access.

Wildcat Walk program returns for students

■ Escort program still seeking student volunteers

Jeni Pruitt
staff writer

When the sun goes down, their ears perk up.

They wait until you're alone, and they only have one thing in mind.

Your safety.

The Wildcat Walk escorts are back again and looking for volunteers.

The number of volunteers for the Wildcat Walk is down from 140 last year to about 40 this year, but the applications are still coming in, said Eric Keen, junior in mechanical engineering and president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

"It's not quite the turnout we had hoped for," said Jason Oblander, senior in history and political science and coordinator of the Wildcat Walk application process. "Many people who helped out last year didn't return this year due to time constraints.

"We're trying to get freshmen involved. Only about 30 percent of our volunteers are freshmen," he said.

Keen said freshmen are hard to recruit because they haven't spent as much time at the University.

"Its hard to get freshmen interested because they don't really see a need for it," Keen said. "Also, it doesn't get dark until late right now, so most people don't see a need to be escorted yet."

The escorts are required to volunteer once a month for a night shift, but they can choose the night they work. The volunteers are on call from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m.

"You aren't busy the entire 12 hours," Oblander said. "The volunteers on a busy night only spend three hours total escorting. They have nine hours free to study or sleep or do whatever they want, as long as they stay in their residence hall."

Escort service on campus

Wildcat Walk escort service will escort students up to a block off campus. Call Wildcat Walk to arrange an escort.

Account to pay for retreat

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Student Senate voted to allocate money from its foundation account to fund its fall retreat after two hours of debate Thursday night.

Four amendments to change the funding for the retreat were defeated before the original bill to take $1,792 from the foundation account passed with a 37-14 roll-call vote.

Money in the foundation account is not generated through student fee money. The balance of the principal in the account is $101,547, and the balance of the interest is $56,323. The account earns $1,000 in interest each month.

"That's the bank's money we're taking, if that's the way you want to look at it. Since I'm a business major, I will," Steve Weatherman, business senator, said.

Money from the foundation account is for one-time expenses. It has been used to purchase things like computers and marching band uniforms.

"This retreat is very vital to the operation of this organization," he said. "This is not a fun little trip. This is to make us better and more efficient."

Senate does not usually fund retreats for other campus groups, but it funds conferences from the reserves and contingencies account. The amount of fund raising a group does is usually considered in the allocations process.

The four amendments that failed would have increased the amount the senators had to pay from their own pockets or changed the account from the foundation account to the reserves for contingencies account.

Tim Riemann, agriculture senator, proposed an amendment that would have required senators to pay $20 instead of $10 to help with retreat costs.

"Very few of the student groups who came to us last year had done no fund raising of their own," Riemann said.

Drew Wallace, business senator, proposed an amendment that would have required senators to pay $15.20 for the retreat. According to his calculations, senators would have matched dollar for dollar the amount

In the past, the annual Student Senate retreat has been partially funded with leftover student activity money. Senate members voted Thursday night to use the interest from its foundation account for this year's retreat.

2 FROM KSU SELECTED AS OFFICERS FOR NATIONAL AG ORGANIZATION

Two national officers were selected from the ranks of K-State's Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow.

Shelly Fogle, senior in agricultural journalism, was selected as the national editor at the 25th Annual Conference in Bloomingdale, Ill.

Larry Erpelding, associate director for academic programs in the College of Agriculture, was selected as the national adviser and executive treasurer of ACT.

ACT is a national student organization to help students begin their first professional association in agriculture.

"ACT is constantly growing and becoming more active on campus," Fogle said. "I would say that we now have 20 to 30 current, active members."

The national ACT roll includes 310 members and 10 associate members.

"One advantage of ACT is that it helps the members make professional contacts," Erpelding said. "We try to recognize and encourage excellence in the growth of communications. We try to do that by having various professional speakers come to meetings and provide leadership experience to members and keep them abreast in agricultural communications."

During her time as national editor, Fogle will prepare articles for the national ACT newsletter and develop an organization home page for World Wide Web.

Fogle served as an intern for American Farm Bureau in Chicago this summer and attended the national conference, where she also spoke.

Erpelding, who is also the faculty adviser for K-State's ACT chapter, was selected as the second national adviser in the 25-year history of ACT.

As the national adviser and executive treasurer, Erpelding will be giving advice to officers to help them carry out their responsibilities.

Kris Boone, associate professor in agricultural journalism and the coordinator of the ACT undergraduate program, is a former member of ACT.

"ACT gives the students the opportunity to meet each other and work with each other in finding a career," Boone said.

FBI CONCLUDES TESTS ON LEG

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The defense theory that the leg found in the rubble of the federal building belonged to the real bomber has been undermined by scientists' conclusion that the limb was that of a black woman.

Authorities believe the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building was bombed on April 19 by someone sympathetic to predominantly white right-wing groups.

"If we are now locked into the white-supremacist theory, then I presume a black person's leg doesn't fit the stereotype we've been asked to accept," said Gerry Goldstein, a Texas attorney and former president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers. He is not connected to the case.

The leg was clad in a size 7-1/2 military-style boot and an olive-drab strap of the sort used by soldiers to tuck their pants into their boots. That led Timothy McVeigh's lawyer to speculate the limb might be the remains of the real bomber.

However, tests conducted by the FBI found that the leg belonged to a black woman age 16 to 30, not a light-skinned man with dark hair, as the state medical examiner's office first concluded.

The FBI tests failed to match the leg to any of the known victims, prompting the medical examiner's office to raise the death toll to

COLLEGE CONTESTS NCAA RULE

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — Jerry Falwell's Baptist college went to court Thursday to block a newly enforced no-gloating rule that forbids a football player from kneeling in prayer on the field to thank God for a touchdown.

Liberty University argued the NCAA ban is religious discrimination and violates civil-rights law.

"The NCAA has enough problems with drugs and crime and violence, sex and rape to bother itself with prohibiting prayer," Falwell, the school's chancellor, said after a hearing in federal court.

Liberty lawyer Tom Neuberger said the NCAA had put itself in the business of deciding what kind of prayer it is going to allow. He said the NCAA wants to force players to pray where the fans can't notice it.

NCAA lawyer Henry Sackett, however, said prayer is not mentioned in the rules and the issue is a question of conduct, not of spirituality.

"When a person kneels in the end zone, nobody but that person and God knows whether he is praying or not," Sackett said. "But everyone is looking at him, and that is the point."

U.S. District Judge James Turk said he would rule Friday on Liberty's request for a temporary restraining order. Liberty's football season starts Saturday in Lynchburg, about 90 miles west of Richmond.

▶ RESIDENCE HALLS

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

David Jayne, junior in civil engineering, studies in his room at Haymaker Hall. Jayne and his roommates live in one of the new three-person suites on the first floor. Three other halls have begun to convert first-floor rooms into the new suites.

Suites offer comfort, privacy

Tonya Bobbitt
staff reporter

Visualize kicking back and chugging a pop, your feet propped up on a sofa in the living room and your roommates asleep in the bedroom.

Some Haymaker Hall residents are enjoying these extra comforts while living in the residence halls.

"I like my room because you have privacy," Gordon Kimble, senior in architecture, said. "You can basically do everything in the room except eat."

The new rooms are Housing and Dining Service's way of meeting resident needs, said Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services. The rooms offer more privacy and space for students, and they are helpful in keeping residents in the halls and bringing in new students.

Expanded rooms are good because they offer more space and privacy for residents, Hasan said.

"Housing is trying to provide people with the comforts of a residence hall but also the privacy and space that an off-campus apartment would have," Hasan said.

The expanded rooms are also convenient because of their location and cost, said Bob Burgess, assistant director for business operations of Housing and Dining Services.

"The rooms are designed as a tool to keep students in the hall," he said.

K-State offers a special double, special single, two-person suite and a three-person suite.

A special double is one bedroom shared by two students; a special single is a one-person room; two- and three-person suites include two rooms shared by two or three people; and all expanded rooms have an attached bathroom.

Other special features offered include dropped ceilings, mini blinds, extra shelving, extra closet space, carpet, a built-in entertainment rack and higher-quality, sound-proofed walls.

West, Marlatt and Haymaker halls offer expanded rooms. Goodnow, which is under construction, will also have expanded rooms. Goodnow's construction is expected to be completed in fall 1996.

The expanded rooms are in high demand and given to residents who have earned seniority in the halls, Hasan said.

"The demand is higher than the supply, and I don't think that we will completely be able to meet the entire demand," he said.

West offered the first expanded rooms last spring. Some West students were placed in the expanded rooms for a testing period, and based on the test results, Housing and Dining began construction on Haymaker, Marlatt and Goodnow halls.

"All of the rooms in the different halls have a different design," Hasan said. "We used West to plan some different designs for Haymaker, and we tried to do better in Marlatt, so Goodnow should be even better."

Christinia Williams, junior in interior design, said she likes her new room in West but feels there are some drawbacks to the expanded room.

"I like my room, especially the bathroom, because we have a lot of space." Williams said. "I don't like the fact that there are less people in the wing, and I don't want to clean my own bathroom."

In Haymaker, Brad Ratliff, senior in social science, said he is happy with his new room.

"I like it a lot because you only have to share your bathroom with two of your friends. Also, you have a living room where you can hang out and is separate from the bedroom," he said.

Residence-hall room options

Expanded rooms are offered in Marlatt, West, Haymaker and Goodnow halls.

Jump in numbers adds up to honors for local chapter

Holly McConkey
staff reporter

There is strength in numbers.

After quadrupling membership numbers, K-State's American Institute of Architecture proved that people help when it comes to receiving the 1995 AIAS National Chapter Honor Award, said Amy Mott, 1994-95 AIAS president and senior in interior architecture.

"We applied for the Chapter Honor Award because it was new for us to have that many members," Mott said. "The sheer numbers help."

K-State's chapter competed against chapters from architecture schools in the United States and Canada.

The total membership of the national organization is between 7,500 and 8,000 student members, said Grace Wallace, AIAS 1995-96 president and junior in architecture.

"We are here to better the profession while we are students and to provide a link between the students and professionals," Wallace said.

The award was based on each chapter's programming and involvement with students, faculty and professionals.

"We have worked really hard to bring our organization up to what it is right now. We got members involved and excited. I don't think some of the other chapters did that," Wallace said.

On a national level, K-State's AIAS chapter has interacted with professional architects.

"We sit on a national board that determines some architecture rules and regulations," said Kimberly Murphy, AIAS vice president and third-year architecture student.

On a local level, the chapter of AIAS is involved in many programs in Manhattan and on campus.

Last year, AIAS was involved with the American Institute of Architecture Central States Region Student, Educator and Practitioner Forum.

The chapter sponsored an event in downtown Manhattan called the Quest. Members were sent out on a scavenger hunt on Poyntz Avenue, Wallace said.

Manhattan has been supportive by lending time and donations to AIAS for their functions, Murphy said.

"We have actually been given donations for all the things we do," she said.

AIAS has a busy agenda this year for its members, Murphy said.

"We are going to get involved with the local chapters of Habitat for Humanity and visit the construction sites of the middle school and the art museum on campus."

On Sept. 9, AIAS will sponsor the annual Sandcastle Charrette, which is a design competition that involves student members and professionals.

The competition is judged by faculty members, and they judge to see who designs the best sand castle, Wallace said.

Mott said AIAS and the activities it sponsors are a good outlet for architecture students.

"Architecture students are pretty busy people. They don't always have time to do many other things. AIAS is a good outlet for them to get involved," Mott said.

Behavior dictates fun factor of Saturday's game

For many, the course of this celebration will involve the consumption of alcohol.

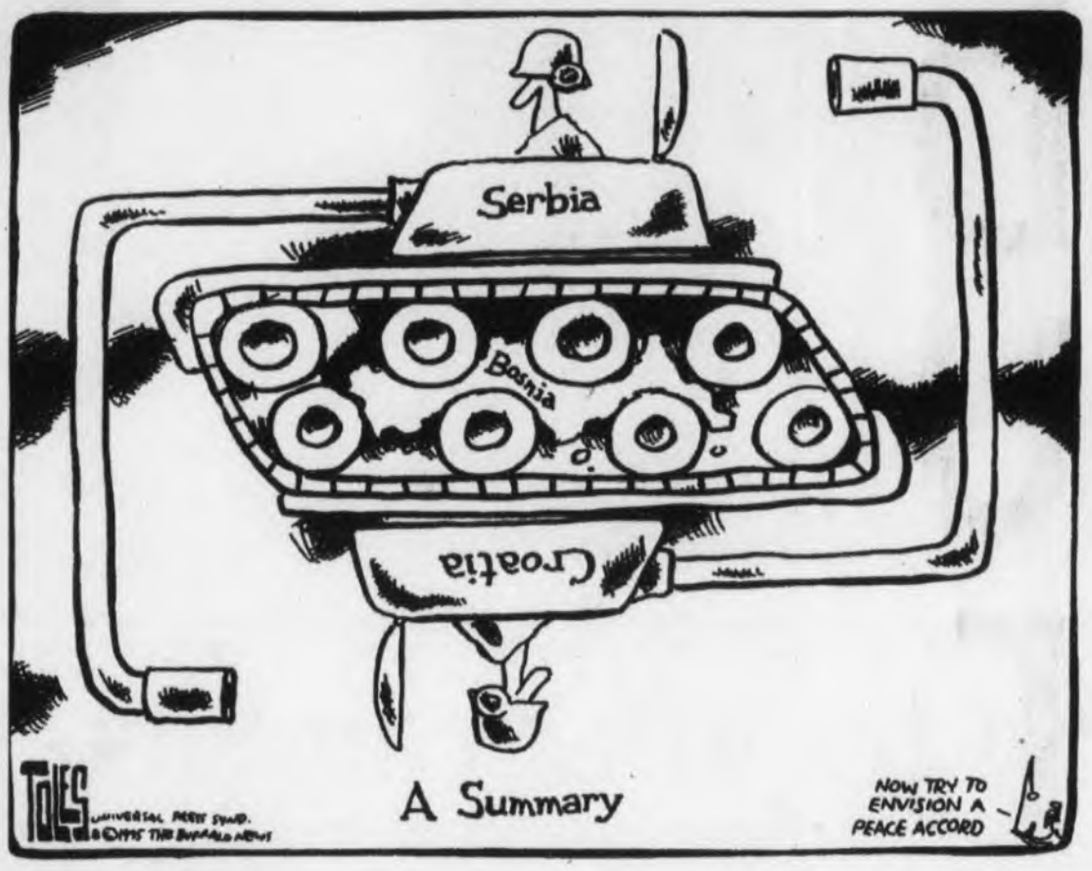
The K-State football season is upon us, filling everyone with high expectations for the Wildcats. The new season also brings with it the beloved tradition of tailgating.

Undoubtedly, a large contingent of the team's supporters will arrive at Wagner Field a couple of hours before the game to celebrate the start of the season. For many, the course of this celebration will involve the consumption of alcohol. A few words of caution are necessary.

Although we would all like comfortable weather for the game, the heat index will still be blistering.

Common sense dictates that if a person is going to be exposed to high degrees of heat and humidity for an extended period of time, alcohol is not the best beverage to refresh one's self.

Tailgaters should exercise responsibility in their drinking this Saturday to avoid becoming acquainted with a Riley County EMS worker. A bad case of heatstroke is a sure way to ruin anyone's afternoon.



Similarly, spectators should be careful with their drinking in light of the recent announcement of a crackdown on alcohol in the stadium parking lot.

If a fan's alcohol is visible, he or she won't be able to bring it into the parking lot. If a fan's alcohol is visible in the parking lot, it will be confiscated.

In light of recent years' events at the stadium, fans should be on their best behavior to avoid any fights or accidents.

Good behavior will help ensure that everyone will have a enjoyable, safe afternoon without giving any campus or county authorities reason to make the rules even more strict.

Dole panders to electorate

COLUMN

DAN LEWERENZ

I was asked the most curious question last year.

My pal, Jouni, a student visiting from Sweden, called on my expertise in the realm of American politics.

"So, tell me about Bob Dole," he said. "I hear he's sort of a wanker."

I have to admit, I have no idea what a "wanker" is, and there is no listing in the dictionary for either "wanker" or "wank." But it doesn't sound good.

"Now that kind of depends on who you are," my cousin, Victor, chimed in. "If you're rich and powerful and want to get richer and more powerful, or if you're from Kansas, then Bob Dole is a pretty good guy.

"But if you're poor and downtrodden, then yeah, he's probably pretty much of a wanker."

I had to think on this one for a while.

Though I've never been a big Bob Dole fan (ever since he attacked public broadcasting by claiming that Sesame Street was a front for militant homosexuals, I've had my doubts about his sanity), I wasn't quite ready to confer upon him the title of wanker.

But a series of events this summer confirmed what I had long suspected.

Jouni was right. Bob Dole is a wanker.

It all started with the now-famous Hollywood speech.

Dole railed against the elites in the entertainment industry for destroying the moral fiber of the nation, singling out several notoriously raunchy rappers and two particularly violent movies.

Had he stopped there, Dole would likely have scored a home run.

Though the musicians in question are no longer recording, and the movies were both meant to be critical of the media's glorification of violence, Dole's point — that there's too much sex and violence in the media — was a valid one.

But Dole didn't stop there. He went on to praise "True Lies," a film chock-full of violence, racism, and misogyny, as a good family movie.

As if having a high-dollar Republican donor (Arnold Schwarzenegger) as the star makes a movie a family movie. Even "True Lies" co-star Jamie Lee Curtis said Dole was crazy.

Dole's comments made him look paid for — violence is OK when it's promoted by the right people.

In his speech, Dole had attacked Time Warner Inc. for reaping the profits of "the debasing of America." But apparently those profits didn't debase Dole's campaign fund.

Dole even tried to turn this potentially embarrassing situation into a positive.

"I think it's a demonstration that they didn't buy anything with Bob Dole," he said in a statement June 4. "It sort of dispels this view that every time somebody makes a donation, you're in their back pocket."

Slick, Bob. Real slick.

Where the money comes from and what the donors stand for doesn't matter to Bob Dole.

He's no whore turning political tricks for a fast buck.

He'll take the buck without turning tricks.

That is, until last week.

That's when Dole's office announced it was returning a donation from the Log Cabin Republicans, a gay Republican organization with more than 10,000 members.

"Our policy is to decline contributions from political groups that have an agenda that is in opposition to Senator Dole's positions on the issues," Dole's office said.

"We have received over 200,000 checks so far in this campaign. If we had been aware of this particular contribution in advance, it would not have been accepted, and it will be refunded.

"Senator Dole's opposition to lifting the ban on gays in the military, for example, runs directly in opposition to the views of this group. In light of this wide disagreement, we feel it is most appropriate to return their contribution."

Most of those 200,000 checks were probably from Mike and Ethel Farmer of Deep Western, Kan. — how a $1,000 check from a Republican political-action committee slipped through without notice would be a story worth hearing.

Especially when Dole spoke with Rich Tafel, Log Cabin's executive director, at a fund-raising dinner. In fact, that $1,000 check bought Tafel's meal.

Dole greeted Tafel, who was wearing a big Log Cabin Republicans name tag, at the June 19 affair and asked the group's opinion on a pending piece of AIDS legislation.

The excuse that the campaign was unaware of the contribution is embarrassingly thin.

What he wasn't aware of was the potential for publicity.

Dole's office did not decide to return the money until after Deb Price, who writes about gay issues for the Detroit Free Press, said she was writing a column about it.

Additionally, Dole must have assumed Log Cabin was interested only in gay issues.

Not likely — I mean, how many Republican politicians do you hear promoting gay issues?

More than likely, Log Cabin is a group of moderate-to-conservative individuals who believe in low taxes and small government. And happen to be gay.

Besides, couldn't this just have been another demonstration that Bob Dole is not bought and paid for?

Instead, it was a demonstration that Dole is more than willing to pander to the whims of the electorate.

Dole keeps Time Warner's money, though he finds its actions morally repugnant. And he returns Log Cabin's money because he disagrees with it on "the issues."

Irony abounds.

When all is said and done, the conclusion is irrefutable. Though millions seem to love you, Bob, I fear this must be done.

Bob Dole, I dub you "wanker."

CSP provides rewarding job

COLUMN

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

It was the summer of my junior year, and I was a member of one of the K-State Community Service Program's summer teams.

In the beginning, I didn't have any high ideals about the program or the project I was doing. I wanted to save the world just as much as the next bleeding heart, but who has time for that? I was a poor college student, not Don Quixote.

When I signed up to work with the Community Service Program, it was because it was a good deal. Period.

I was getting more money in eight weeks than I would've gotten working at Burger King all summer, and I didn't have any real expenses because I lived with a host family. I thought it was a nice, cushy job to round out my résumé.

That is, until my last week on the project.

I was staffing a day program for kids who were too young to join the Boys and Girls Club at the Deer Creek Community Center in the heart of Topeka's low-income housing project.

On any given day, I had an average of 27 children. The youngest was 2, the oldest 10. They were a loud bunch. Obnoxious as hell, and the worst one of them was a boy named Stephen.

He was about 4 and walked around like a young African prince surveying his fields. That child stood on my last nerve from the moment we met and stayed there for almost my entire rotation.

Stubborn, belligerent and completely disrespectful, he was also the smartest child I'd ever seen and so full of anger it practically shone through his skin.

His whole body was a weapon he used whenever he could on anyone who got too close to him.

I can't count the number of afternoons I spent sitting on the floor holding him bobsled style to keep him from running away or hurting someone.

He screamed as if I were beating him until he figured out I wasn't going to let him go or shake his brains out.

Once he calmed down, we would talk. Sometimes I just rocked him or rubbed his back.

Sometimes, I let him run away from me because I couldn't stand to be near him another minute.

During all this, I began to see something in Stephen I hadn't before. I saw hope and a desire to learn.

I saw through the bravado and obscenities into a vulnerable little boy stuffed with so much pride he could barely walk upright.

I saw a child the system was failing and would continue to fail, but whom I could only try not to.

There was so little time. I could only do so much — listen, encourage. It was an uphill battle all the way, too.

There wasn't an inch of ground I got with that child I didn't earn. But I grew to love him despite that, or because of it, just as much as if he were my own child.

I think he grew to care about me too, though he wouldn't have ever confessed to that, the little booger.

He made me feel like I had a stake in the world.

He made me feel like I had a responsibility to make this place better for him and those who came after them than they have been for me.

Stephen made me feel that there was a cost for the privileges I've had. There was an obligation to take it back to the neighborhood and those who need it most.

Stephen made me want to do more.

Not every person who gets on a CSP summer team has had the chance to affect lives as much as I did, but the opportunity to be affected is just as great.

The chance to do more than make money and more than round out a résumé is worth eight weeks of your life.

I wouldn't have traded mine for anything in the world.

Consider it.

▶ SOFTBALL CHALLENGE

Editor,

The members of the 1995-96 Student Governing Association challenge the administration of Kansas State University to a high-spirited softball game.

We have narrowed it down to two days that will work best for SGA. Those days are 4 p.m. Sept. 18 or Sept. 25.

We would like to bring back the tradition of an annual event to raise funds for the United Way of Manhattan.

Your immediate attention to this matter would be greatly appreciated. We look forward to hearing from you.

P.S. We hope you will be able to round up enough bodies (able or not) to field a team this year!

bungee bound

Expressing her second thoughts about the jump, Trina Holmes, senior in journalism and mass communications, receives encouragement from Jimmy Samuel, jump master for Bungee Boys, shortly before Holmes' first jump.

Collegian writer finds the rush, adrenaline in bungee jumping

On Aug. 29, I did the scariest thing I have ever done.

I bungee jumped.

The worst part was waiting for the actual moment. In the hour before I took the plunge, I couldn't think straight.

I was throwing clothes all over, trying to find some shorts that wouldn't fall off and a shirt that wouldn't fly over my head.

While driving out to the Bungee Boys' of Texas Inc. crane in the Blue Hills Shopping Center parking lot, I thought I was going to explode. My legs and arms were shaking, and it was hard for me to keep my mind on the road.

Everything I had heard about bungee jumping was swimming through my head. Some friends had told me that it hurt to jump, that it felt like you had been hit by a train. They said I would be sore for days.

I got to the site, pulled myself together and walked over to the registration table.

I proceeded to sign away my life and any opportunity I might have to sue them if I were maimed or critically injured during the jump. That does a lot for a person's nerves.

Kent Kaser, owner of Bungee Boys, said the crew travels from Puerto Rico to Canada every year.

"The response is always really good here," Kaser said. "We come here every year. It's one of our favorite stops."

I asked Kaser if males typically jumped more than females.

"More girls jump in Manhattan," he said. "They're braver, I guess."

Vowing not to disappoint my fellow female jumpers, I walked on quivering legs to Rob Mattox, a Bungee Boys employee, who helped me step into a safety waist harness and tightly fastened my ankle straps.

Mattox said most people who come out to jump do it again.

"When they only intend to do it once, they usually do it more than once before we leave," he said.

I watched two people fall from 125 feet above me and flop around in the air before it was my turn to go.

As I stepped into the fluorescent green cage, I began to sweat profusely and seriously question my sanity.

Maybe it was a form of the diving-board syndrome, but once I got to the top of the crane, I didn't think I could do it. In fact, I almost begged them to take me back down.

Then Jimmy Samuel, jump master, dropped the gate, told me to step over the cord and grab hold of two handles beside the open side of the cage.

I frantically tried to decide whether I should jump forward or backward.

I realized that facing the ground as it rushed up to me wasn't going to work, so I stood with my back toward the open wind.

After he counted, Samuel expected me to let go, but I couldn't pry my fingers off the handles.

There was something about plunging myself off a platform at someone else's command that really rubbed me the wrong way.

He told me to tell him when I was ready for him to count, then to let go and enjoy the rush.

This time, I forced myself to let go. That was the hardest thing I have ever done.

For some reason, it is against the body's natural tendencies to purposely place yourself in jeopardy, and I screamed the entire way down.

I concentrated on keeping my eyes open and watched as I came rushing toward the giant mat, only to be hurled back up toward the sky.

Bouncing back and forth, I grabbed hold of the cord connecting my waist to the cord at my ankles and pulled my head up — to keep it from being rammed into the crash mat below me.

Mattox then grabbed me, helped me sit down in a chair near the mat and unhooked the cord at my feet.

Laughing, he told me people in Junction City had probably heard my screams.

Shaking, I waited as he unfastened the harness. I can't explain how I felt.

I just wanted to sit on that chair and smile forever. I didn't feel like I ever needed to eat or breathe or sleep again — I was so full of adrenaline.

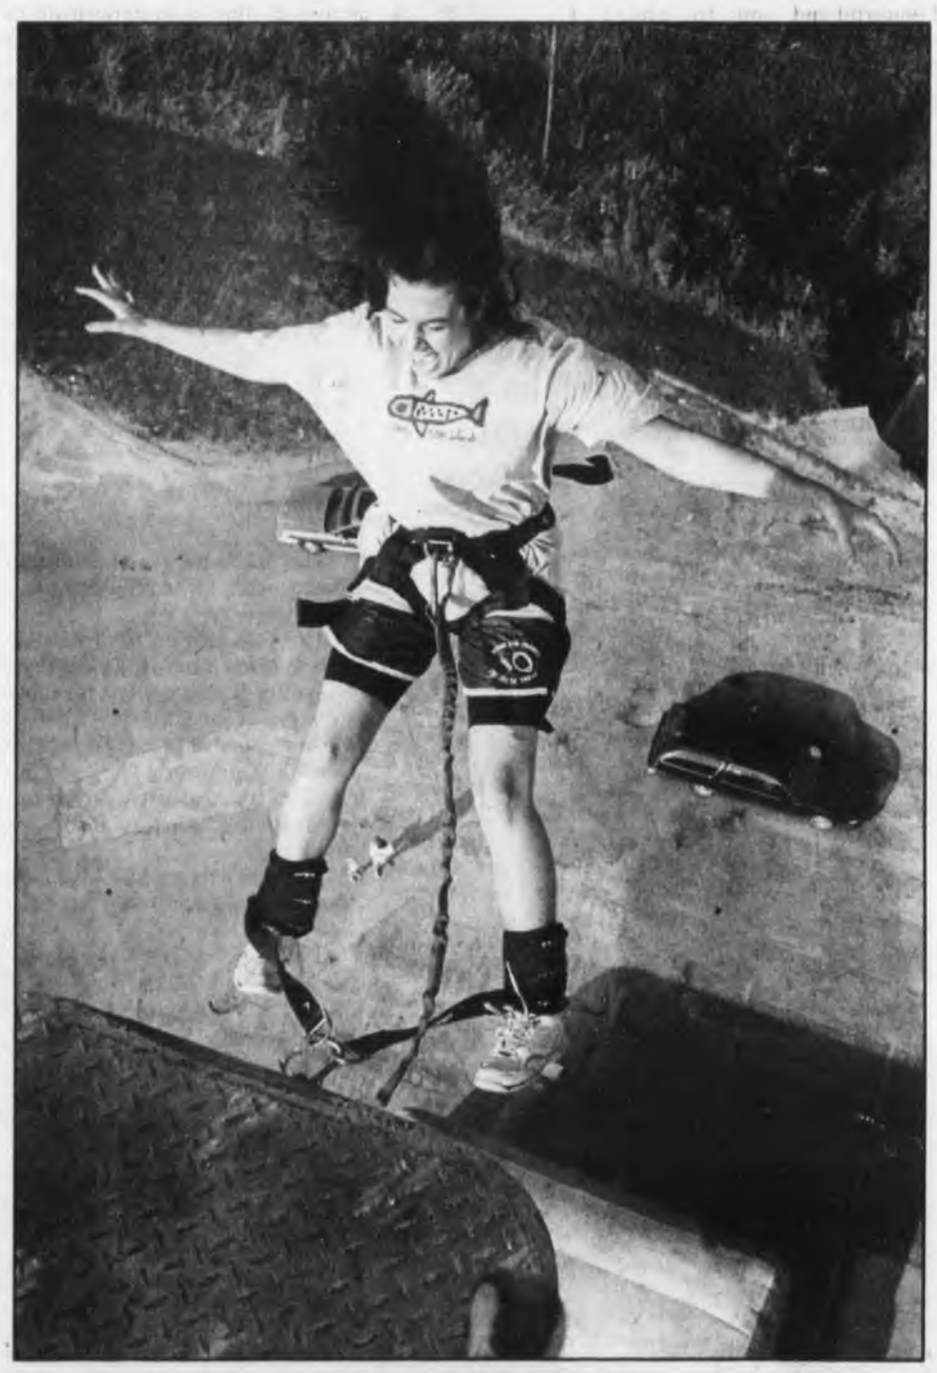
It was great, and I wanted to do it again.

Talking to some jumpers after the experience, it seemed as if they were feeling the same way I was.

"After it was over I felt kind of queasy and shaky, but I wanted to do it again over and over and over and over again," Matt Ohm, junior in park resource management, said.

Maia Magaña, junior in business, said she would like to jump again.

She said she wasn't really scared until she got to the top of the crane when she jumped the first time.



"I wasn't scared at first," she said. "It didn't look that high, but when I went up there and looked down, I thought, 'Oh my goodness. What am I doing?'

"But I didn't chicken out, and I'm proud of myself."

Ohm said the scariest part for him was the second bounce.

"I got a little scared when I bounced back up and I wasn't over the mat anymore," he said. "I thought, if this thing was going to break, I'd fall on my head. But it didn't, thank God.

"It was great — total adrenaline."

Holmes falls from the 125-foot platform above the Blue Hill Shopping Center parking lot. Holmes decided to jump backward so she wouldn't have to watch the ground approaching.

Rob Mattox, a Bungee Boys employee, helps Holmes with her ankle straps. In addition to the ankle straps, Holmes was also required to wear a safety waist harness.

Cats ready to take on Temple Owls

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

The time has come. No more grueling two-a-day practices in the August heat.

No more of the tedious processes involved in practicing a play or formation over and over again until it's perfect.

And, most importantly, no more hitting players with the same uniform on.

The time has come — time to hit someone in a different-colored jersey.

"Yeah, finally," defensive tackle Tim Colston said. "It's been three weeks. We're looking for someone else to beat up on. That will be a nice change."

That first someone will be Temple, a team that went 2-9 last season, including 0-7 in the Big East.

Although they only won twice last season, the Owls offense did average 22.2 points a game and piled up total yards by the handful.

The Owls' quarterback, junior Henry Burris, threw for 2,716 yards and 21 touchdowns last season.

In a 49-42 loss to Syracuse last season, Burris set school records for pass attempts, pass completions and passing yardage when he went 32-for-53 for 392 yards.

He also holds three Temple records in career 300-yard games from last season and a record eight 200-yard games in a season.

"He's a fine quarterback," Temple head coach Ron Dickerson said. "I wish we had great players we feel so highly about at all positions, but we don't."

Wildcats cornerback Joe Gordon, an all-America candidate and one of the cover men in the conference, might have Temple's Van Johnson as an assignment. In 1994, Johnson made 34 catches for 622 yards last season.

After facing some of the top receivers in the country last season, Gordon is up for the challenge.

"I love one-on coverage," Gordon said. "That's my favorite."

Last season, the defensive backs were the new kids on the playground, and they responded with a great season, intercepting 12 passes and giving up only seven touchdowns through the air.

Expectations for the secondary will be higher this season based on last year's performance.

"Some people might say it's pressure, but personally, it's another stepping stone," Gordon said.

"Last year, people said that we wouldn't be worth a thing. We felt like as a defense and as a secondary, we weren't going to be the weak link," Gordon said.

"So this year, people say the tide has turned, but to us, we don't see it as being that way."

"We feel like we have to come out here every day and work and get better and improve on last year in order to become a great secondary."

On the ground, the Owls struggled last season, averaging only 2.3 yards a carry and scoring a meager eight touchdowns.

This season, Temple has its two top rushers back in Juan Gaddy with 358 yards last season and Danny Davis with 263 yards.

That leaves the job of stuffing the run on first and second down to the defensive line and Colston, who's resigned to the fact that he'll be double-teamed throughout the season.

> TIM COLSTON
> DEFENSIVE TACKLE

"I'll just take whatever they'll give me," he said. "I don't do anything out of the ordinary. I watch a lot of film and just know what they're doing before they do it."

If the Wildcats can snuff the run on first and second downs, it will put the Owls into passing situations, where the backfield of Chuck Marlowe, Chris Canty, Mario Smith and Gordon will be waiting.

Because the Wildcats play mostly man-to-man in the secondary, the linebackers' jobs are amplified, often covering a tight end or a running back one-on-one.

Redshirt freshman Travis Ochs and junior DeShawn Fogle join senior Percell Gaskins at the linebacker position. Gaskins said inexperience won't be a problem.

"All the guys are coming along fine," he said. "We got seven top guys that are going to get a lot of playing time.

"I'm ready to get out there and see how good we really are."

Parading their purple pride, people from all places came out to the Purple Power Play on Poyntz. There were food, games and entertainment for everyone.

The annual event included contests, giveaways and a pep rally for K-State Football. It also allows area merchants to showcase their merchandise and show their support for K-State football.

"It's a promotional thing. We're not out here for the money," Janet Ball, manager of Applebee's Bar and Grill, said.

"We just want to support K-State."

There were more than 15 merchants and vendors on hand. Dorothy and the Cowardly Lion were even out supporting the Wildcats.

Also included in the event was a special Manhattan Town Center sale, which started at 9 p.m. and ran until midnight.

"We expect to do another 35 to 40 percent over what we would have done without having this go on," Bobby Davenport, manager of Sports Page, said.

"We're just mooching off the people walking by. It's great."

The Power Play was put together by six sponsors to bring new people into the area.

The mall and Manhattan Mainstreet, a national organization that deals with downtown revitalization, have been involved in the event since its inception.

"Our goal is to bring in people from outside the area in hopes that they will see something they like," Scott Morrill, project manager for Manhattan Mainstreet, said.

Downtown Manhattan underwent a $64-million renovation eight years ago in an attempt to attract businesses.

"Bottom line is money. We want people to see businesses like Pier 1 and possibly buy something to help Pier 1 pay bills," Morrill said.

Despite a smooth appearance, there were many problems behind the scenes.

"We were scrambling all over the place because one of our biggest groups had a tragic accident concerning one of their members," Morrill said.

Baker first meet for cross country team

Phil Roberts
staff reporter

This weekend, the K-State cross country team kicks off its season at Baker University.

The competition field will also include teams from the University of Missouri-Kansas City, Johnson County Community College, Missouri Southern University and the University of Kansas.

"The Baker meet is a relatively low-key meet," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

The women's team and the men's team hope to improve on last year's finishes.

The women's team is coming off a third-place finish in the Big 8, and the men's team is hoping to improve on its seventh-place finish last year.

K-State will take nine men and five to six women runners to the Baker meet.

The team starts the season with four returning women, four returning men, five new women runners and 13 new men runners.

This meet will be used mainly for experience and to determine the top runners for the rest of the cross-country season.

"Basically, this meet will be used for the freshmen and the sophomores," said assistant coach Terry Drake, who coordinates the cross-country team.

"Since it is low-key, we just want to make sure that the younger runners are ready for the bigger meets coming up, like the KU meet."

Potential cross country runners showed up to start practice on Aug. 16 and endured the sweltering Kansas heat.

"We've been real happy with the progress so far," Drake said.

"They've handled the heat real well."

> "Basically, this meet will be used for the freshmen and sophomores."
> TERRY DRAKE
> ASSISTANT COACH

Because it is the first meet of the young season, the coaches have put limitations on their runners to make sure nobody sustains any injuries that might limit them for action in future meets.

"We won't let them lead at the meet," Drake said. "They're still used to high school, where they can get out in front early and blow the competition away.

"They need to get used to running in packs. The guys are used to running in packs, but the girls need to stay back," Drake said.

The coaches are also trying to find the weaknesses of the runners at this first meet.

This will help the runners learn from their weaknesses and improve upon them.

"This is really a fun meet," Drake said. "The guys take it pretty seriously because it determines the top nine runners, but it really is the funnest meet of the season. It is also the easiest course we will run on this year. It's the only golf course that we run this year."

Netters ready for ranked foe at Long Beach State tourney

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

Second-year coach Jim Moore and the Wildcat volleyball team are ready to jump into action this weekend.

The Cats are in Long Beach, Calif., where they will face the No. 4-ranked 49ers this afternoon. On Saturday, they will match up with Utah State.

"Long Beach State is really good," Moore said. "We're not really sure what to expect.

"They have a setter who has never set, but she was the high-school player of the year last year. They also have a starter injured, but they're the No. 4 team in the country for a reason."

Sophomore setter Devon Ryning said the team is excited about starting off the season with such a tough team.

"We've really been working hard to stay focused," Ryning said. "This will give us a chance to see how we stack up against one of the best teams in the country."

Junior swing hitter Kelli Luther said she thinks a win against Long Beach is realistic.

"A lot of people don't think we have a chance because they're Long Beach State and we're Kansas State," Luther said.

"We have nothing to lose and everything to gain."

Injuries haven't been too much of a problem early on for the Cats, but they will be without junior play-set hitter Yolonda "Toie" Young for the first match.

"We've had to watch Toie pretty close," Moore said. "Her knees have been giving her some problems."

Coach Moore also said the attitude of the team has been great, and the team is ready to play against someone besides itself.

"We've been here three weeks with a week and a half of two-a-days. We can't wait to go and put all our hard work to use," Luther said.

"They'll be prepared. They've got a great coach, and he'll have them ready. But we're just as prepared, and we've got just as good a coach," Luther said.

The Utah State Aggies have struggled the past few years. They finished 1994 with a 2-28 record, but they return several key players.

"They have struggled the past few years, but they have outstanding recent history," Moore said. "They will be tough."

"We really missed their presence tonight," Morrill said.

The Power Play originally didn't involve the K-State football team.

"When Coach Snyder got here, we might have had 50 to 60 people here, but since then, we've had a pretty good turnout," Morrill Said.

The purpose of the Purple Power Play on Poyntz might have been to drum up business and showcase merchants, but 8-year-old Christopher Donally had simpler plans.

"I just want to see the football players and get their autograph. I want to get Coach Snyder's autograph too," Donally said.

Subcommittee approves athletic department's fiscal practices

Dan Lowerenz
sports editor

K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is in substantial conformity with the standards established by the NCAA, according to a subcommittee report discussed Thursday.

Tom Rawson, chair of the NCAA Self-Study Subcommittee on Fiscal Integrity, said K-State's fiscal management was good.

"I personally believe that the K-State athletic department has incredible guidelines and procedures," Rawson said.

"I think that with the more stringent state of Kansas policies, we're probably better than many other institutions."

The subcommittee examined the athletic department's fiscal policies based on a set of criteria set by the NCAA.

"The items were drafted by the NCAA, and we just draft the responses," Rawson said.

The up-and-down nature of collegiate athletics poses special problems for financial planning.

"One of the things we've found in this particular study is the volatility of funding in athletics," Rawson said.

"One year we go to a bowl game; the next year we don't. One year we have seven home games; the next year we have six. If there's bad weather, it's not uncommon to miss $20,000 in revenue from a single major event."

K-State uses a number of measures to make up for such volatility. A contingency reserve of 1 percent of the total budget is maintained on an annual basis to cover unexpected variations.

Additionally, an operational contingency reserve is maintained with at least $450,000.

Wildcat athletics also has a large number of benefactors, helping significantly with its financial situation. Individual sports receive in-kind gifts, and there is a large support network of K-State boosters.

"Part of the deal we have for the football team is that Nike supplies us with shoes at a discount," said Bruce Van De Velde, associate athletic director and subcommittee member.

Other sports make their own arrangements either locally or with a national sponsor.

"Each sport does this in one way or another, getting golf gloves donated and the like," Keith Ratzloff, University controller and subcommittee member, said.

The department also receives several thousand dollars annually from nearly 30 different booster clubs. In 1994, K-State boosters raised nearly $143,000 dollars, almost double the 1992 figures.

"One of the advantages that K-State has is that all booster groups work through the foundation," Rawson said. "There isn't a separate bank account. That helps us avoid some of the temptations of other athletic departments to develop large accounts controlled by the athletic department."

Though the subcommittee has presented its report, the process is not yet complete.

"The next step will be a full-day session of the steering committee," Rawson said. "Later, another open meeting will be held, and finally, the NCAA will send some visitors to review our findings sometime next year."

Nebraska routs Oklahoma State in Big 8 opener

Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — Nebraska apparently didn't have much trouble replacing the 14 starters gone from last year's national championship team.

The No. 2 Cornhuskers dominated Oklahoma State, piling up 671 yards on the way to a 64-21 victory Thursday night.

Lawrence Phillips and Tommie Frazier led the way, with Phillips scoring three first-half touchdowns and Frazier throwing for two TDs and running for one.

Nebraska had 513 yards on the ground, 153 by Phillips. The Cornhuskers defense allowed 282 yards, but most of them came in the second half when the starters were on the sideline.

"Our running game was on tonight," Frazier said. "If it's on like that, I don't think too many teams can stop us."

It was an ugly debut for Oklahoma State coach Bob Simmons. His team had 1 yard of offense in the first quarter, just 95 at halftime, and five times during the game was held to 5 yards or less on possessions.

"I don't know quite what to make of a game like that," coach Tom Osborne said. "We certainly didn't try to embarrass them any."

Nebraska, 13-0 last year, won its 26th straight regular-season game — the longest streak in the country — and beat Oklahoma State for the 22nd straight time. They have not lost to the Cowboys since 1961.

Oklahoma State, 3-7-1 in 1994, lost its 19th straight conference game dating to 1992.

"Basically, we need to be a sound football team. Right now we're not," Simmons said.

"We just played a national-championship program. Now we have to hold our heads up and become a solid football team.

"I'm not apologizing for the way we played. They did not do anything that we didn't prepare for. We just didn't execute what we can do."

Phillips, cleared Tuesday by the NCAA to play, had 125 yards at halftime. He wound up with just 12 carries and took a seat early in the third quarter after the Cornhuskers scored on their first possession of the second half to take a 43-7 lead.

Phillips fumbled at midfield on the Cornhuskers' first possession, but the defense made that mistake incidental by holding Oklahoma State to minus-15 yards in three plays.

Nebraska then drove 72 yards in 12 plays with Phillips scoring on a 3-yard run. A field goal and defensive touchdown — Terrell Farley returned an interception 29 yards — made it 16-0 early in the second quarter.

David Thompson, who had 128 yards on 16 carries, provided one of the few Cowboy highlights when he went 79 yards to set up a touchdown that brought Oklahoma State within 16-7.

But Phillips immediately put a halt to any Cowboy momentum, going 80 yards for a score on the first play after the kickoff.

"I think that killed 'em," Frazier said.

Phillips said the play was designed to go outside.

"They were moving real well side to side. I could see them coming off their blocks and I just cut it back under and there was no one there," he said.

Phillips added a 27-yard touchdown on the next possession, and Frazier's 1-yard option keeper with 59 seconds left in the half made it 36-7.

Frazier, who missed much of last season because of a blood clot in his left leg, looked sharp.

He ran for 64 yards on 10 carries and completed 6-of-10 for 120 yards, including a 76-yard touchdown pass to Reggie Baul on the Cornhuskers' second play of the second half.

Phillips' eligibility was in question while the NCAA looked into a meal he ate in November that was paid for by a representative of an agent. Phillips repaid the man for the meal in July.

He remains under NCAA investigation for a car bought by his guardians at a California state home, where he was raised since age 13.

K-STATE

"Cycles and Transitions," an exhibit of work by Janet Sorensen, is now on display in the Willard Gallery.

Sorensen's metaphorical drawings invite close inspection, as many of her ideas are revealed through subject matter.

Like a fine Flemish painting, she is careful not to hide the meaning of her work in too much of a personal characteristic, but rather leaves details of significance as a bridge to the viewer to develop their own interpretations.

"I hope people see them as an opportunity to look at their own experiences," she said. "They all have fairly specific autobiographical content, although you don't have to read it as my story.

"I don't want everyone to psychoanalyze me. People will find parallels to their own experiences," she said.

In "Access," executed in prismacolor pencil, Sorensen's subject matter includes a tape measure, a raven and a strand of beads being unraveled. This whole scene is set in a windowsill looking out onto a wooded countryside.

The wooded background appears in most of her work, with a peculiar layer of leafless, wrenching rows of trees in a middleground between the windowsill foreground and the heavily wooded background.

Another reoccurring device Sorensen uses is one of confinement. Many of her drawings of formal gardens are enclosed in a wall. Her still lifes, like "Access," are contained within a window.

"In a formal way, it helps to define the space, but in a metaphorical way, it defines the limitations we all work with," Sorensen said.

"No one has total freedom. It's not a bad thing, just reality," she said.

Although subject matter weighs heavy in Sorensen's work, she said she is more concerned with the process of arriving at the finished product.

"It's not like I know ahead of time what it's going to look like," she said. "It's a process, and the process reveals things I enjoy being a part of."

Sorensen received her bachelor of fine arts from K-State in 1982 and her master of arts and master of fine arts from the University of Iowa in 1984 and 1985 respectively. She now teaches art at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Her show runs through September 15 in the Willard Gallery in Willard 116. Gallery hours are Monday and Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

KANSAS CITY

If you're planning a trip to Kansas City, Mo., in the next couple of weeks, stop by the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art.

September 10 through October 22 will showcase an exhibition of photographs by renowned American photographer Dorothea Lange. The photographs on display are images of Depression-era families and migrant workers from the 1920s through the 1950s.

Lange worked under the auspices of the Works Progress Administration to record the hardships of the working class, mostly in California.

The Nelson is open Tuesday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Friday 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is $2 with a valid student ID and free on Saturdays. For information call 1-816-751-1ART.

TOPEKA

Perhaps the most celebrated Kansas event of 1995, the exhibit "Treasures of the Czars," a collection of exquisite and priceless objects d'art from Russia, is still showing at the Kansas International Museum to enthusiastic audiences in Topeka.

The show includes crowns, furs, scepters and other useless, decorative items used since the time of the Romanovs by the Russian monarchy, or czars. The collection is being shown only twice in America, so consider yourself lucky to go.

If you don't go to Topeka, your next best bet is heading off to Russia because most of these pieces will probably not be exhibited anywhere for quite some time.

The blockbuster exhibit closes December 31. Tickets are $15, $13.50 for senior citizens, and $6 for children 5-12. You can charge by phone at 1-800-269-0901. For general information, call 1-800-235-1030.

Advanced mapping system planned to assist city, county

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

A new mapping system could speed up responses to Riley County emergencies.

County and city commissioners met Thursday to discuss the project, which is scheduled to begin partial operation by spring 1996.

Automated mapping will make it easier to identify each address accurately so that emergency vehicles can respond more quickly.

The map will also be able to assist schools in creating bus routes and companies in finding their service area.

"Essentially, when you're done, you'll have an intelligible map," Monty Wedel, planning and special projects director, said.

An aerial fly-over of the county has been completed, and the next step is to put it in digital form.

Geographical Information System is the computer software that will digitize the aerial view of the county and make the map more intelligent.

It will also allow the county to connect to a network in the future, Wedel said.

With the new mapping system, address and zoning changes in the county will be able to be updated regularly.

"That's an investment into the future. It's not something you're going to have to redo," Wedel said.

Phase one of the mapping will cost about $140,000.

Some of the costs of phase one will entail the cost of the aerial view, digitalizing the view into the computer and compiling address and street names.

The final phases of the project will cost about $360,000.

An estimated $75,000 is still needed for the project, Karen McCulloh, county commissioner, said.

She said total funding for the project hasn't been approved yet because it will be such a costly project.

Western Resources, an electric company, and the city will be contributing money for the project.

"This is a win-win situation, no doubt about it," Jim Williams, county commission chairman, said.

In other business, the commissioners discussed a proposed business park.

The city has looked at many different locations for a business park but have not chosen a site.

The business park is a city project, but the county is going to help with funding.

Williams said he was concerned about how the county would play a part in the infrastructure of the business park.

"Somewhere, we'd like to be in the logs so we can do some planning," he said.

Mayor Edith Stunkel said she would check into whether it was legal for the city and county commissioners to discuss the matter in an executive session.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, said he has been concerned for two years about how much land the city owns.

Hall said he knows the city owns at least 96 acres of land in the existing industrial park, which is in the area around Wal-Mart, but said he would like to know exactly how much land the city owns that has not been developed.

The undeveloped land is being leased for farming, he said.

"We have never truly established what is out there," Hall said.

The city plans on investigating further how much land the city owns.

Hall said he could not justify spending between $5.2 million and $17 million on a new 200-acre industrial park when the city still owned undeveloped land in the existing park.

The city has already designated $5.2 million for infrastructure improvements for a new park but does not have the land on which to build the park.

"I think it is putting the cart before the horse," Hall said.

TSL loses veteran guitarist, goes on with the show

Nolan Schramm
arts and entertainment editor

Monday night's show at Bombers featuring Stick, Hum and Truck Stop Love, will go on — with a new guitarist.

Amidst flying rumors and speculation on why TSL guitarist and vocalist Matt Mozier quit the band in mid-tour, drummer Eric Melin set the record straight.

"If you want the real reason Matt quit, it's because he didn't want to do it anymore. It's as simple as that," Melin said. "His girlfriend didn't make him quit the band. We didn't make him quit the band. He just didn't want to do it anymore."

Mozier agreed, saying it was basically a series of life events that pointed him in a different direction.

"When music became a career — became a business — it became less fun," the former vocalist and guitarist said. "It was a lot of hard work for little gain."

Mozier had told his bandmates about his discontent before the tour had begun. After transpontation woes on the tour landed TSL back in Manhattan, Matt made his resignation final.

With a heavy touring schedule to support their latest album, the members of TSL started looking for Mozier's replacement.

The first person they spoke with was long-time friend Jim Crego, guitarist and vocalist for the now-defunct Minnesota trio, God's Favorite Band.

He agreed to help TSL finish the critical East leg of its tour, ultimately leading to New York for a stop at the CMJ Music Festival.

Nothing is definite yet, but TSL has practiced a few Crego-composed GFB tunes, including "Got a Secret" and "Brede Boy," both from GFB's final LP, "Down to the Filter" (1994).

Crego and TSL have also composed one new tune together.

One must wonder what hybrid style of Midwest rock 'n' roll would result from the amalgamation of two bands with such similar roots.

With the melodic and sometimes aggressive musical influence of Crego, mixed with the laid-back, equally dynamic powerhouse of TSL, the result will likely be as smooth and relaxing as a blend of fine Scotch whiskey, with just enough of a bite to clear your sinuses.

One thing is certain: If Crego indeed joins the band, it will be a long-term commitment to a serious musical endeavor, with no chords barred.

"The minute he becomes a member of the group, he becomes a member of the band who sings songs," Melin said. "We don't want a hired gun."

TSL and Crego are now solidifying the song lineup for Monday's show, which is planned to include several Crego-composed GFB tunes.

Although many bands would consider it an indignation in their hometowns, a twist in the playing order forced TSL to be the opening act.

Melin just shrugs it off. "We didn't want to cause anybody any trouble. We just wanted to play," he said.

Mozier said he will be at the show on Monday, where he will see Truck Stop Love from a perspective he has never seen it from before.

"I'm just leaving part of my life behind," he said. "It's time to move on to another part."

Champagne, Ill. rockers Hum will be the headlining act, along with the infamous Stick.

Tickets are on sale at Bombers. They cost $6 in advance and $8 at the door.

The show is scheduled to begin at 9 p.m.

TYLER

Kansas Lottery tickets are sold at about 1,900 locations in the state.

Ziemak said the commission mailed letters to retailers in August notifying them it planned to implement an ADA compliance plan. He said the uncompleted plan might not involve structural changes to businesses that sell lottery tickets.

"Our interpretation of the law is that we need to provide access to our tickets," he said. "If that means a disabled person drives up and blows his horn and the retailer comes out and provides the tickets, we would comply."

Tyler said that was fine as long as all people were able to get drive-up lottery-ticket service.

"I want to move things forward to help people," Tyler said. "The government has laws and tools to change things if it wants to."

ESCORT

The volunteers often find the required time helps their studies.

"It helps me study because it forces me to hang around the Derby Complex and study more," Scott Hines, senior in accounting, said.

Most escorts volunteer because they want to get involved, and campus safety is important to them.

"I got involved with this because I thought that if my mom went out and walked on campus, I'd want someone with her," Oblander said. "My roommate felt the same way about his sister. I want anyone to be safe — male or female."

The experienced volunteers will dominate the service until October, when the volunteers will begin training the new volunteers.

"This first month, we're using the old escorts," Keen said.

"In October, we'll run experienced and inexperienced pairs together. Then in November, we'll turn them loose and see how it works out."

The Association of Residence Halls is also looking for volunteers to help the campus police with the dispatching end of the service.

The volunteers would only be required to work from 6 p.m. to 11 p.m.

"We're looking for volunteers to answer phones and pass the information on to the dispatcher," Capt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police said.

Students wishing to volunteer should pick up an application at their residence hall's front desk or stop by the campus police statipn.

Like last year, the service provides an escort for faculty, staff and students to anywhere on campus or up to one block off campus.

It is offered weekdays and weekends from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m.

The city of Manhattan will fund the first semester of the expansion.

"We just got a $20,000 allocation from the city for off-campus escorts," Finkeldei said. "The money is from the city annexation. Five thousand dollars will go for the start-up equipment, and $15,000 will pay the escorts' salaries for the first semester."

However, the Wildcat Walk plans to expand its services to include off-campus students in fall 1996.

"Last year, we decided to create an all-campus escort service," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

"The first step was to consolidate all the Residence Halls' individual escorts into one central service. The second phase will extend the Wildcat Walk up to six blocks off campus."

Although phase one of the service relies strictly on volunteers now, phase two would allow K-State to pay off-campus escorts a $5-per-hour salary.

The paid escorts will have official uniforms and badges, and they will be trained by the campus police.

Each year the University receives a 2- to 3-percent budget increase to compensate for inflation.

SENATE

they contributed to the retreat with the money taken from the foundation account.

Wallace said he would feel comfortable if he could tell his constituents senators paid $1 for every $1 they took out of the account.

Jason Cole, arts and sciences senator, proposed an amendment that required senators to pay their entire retreat expense and not take any money from the Student Governmening Association accounts.

"I personally don't want any money to come out of the foundation account," Cole said.

Accountability was the issue as Weatherman and Gip Githens, education senator, debated.

Weatherman said if Senate had to break one rule to fund the retreat, it should do it.

Githens said he was in favor of the amendment because Senate should be accountable to its constituents.

"We're hypocrites," he said. "That's why we get written up."

The final amendment, offered by Renee Fisher, arts and sciences senator, would have changed the allocation from the foundation account to the reserves for contingencies account.

By changing the funding from the foundation to the reserves account, the retreat money would have come directly from student fee money, Weatherman said.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said if the money came out of reserves, Senate would be taking money away from students.

The original bill to fund the fall retreat from the foundation account passed.

Senators will be required to pay $10 toward the cost of the retreat.

In other business, Dan Lewerenz, former arts and sciences senator, was confirmed as the cabinet's athletic liaison.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Nutrition Notes

John P. Foreyt, Baylor College of Medicine, shared these healthy behavior tips at the second biennial conference on "Building Alliances to Communicate Food, Nutrition and Fitness Information to the Public."

"Diets don't work! Throw out the scale and focus on healthy eating and exercise as something fun to do. People must get active or they'll never lose weight. Instead of dieting, people need to concentrate on eating in moderation and reducing fat, not cutting calories indiscriminately. Never cut out desserts, that's the worst. Hunger will always overwhelm willpower. If people cut down gradually, set realistic goals - no more than a 10 percent weight loss - and engage in physical activity, they will lose weight."

WEIGHT AND FITNESS AREA

Our new 10,000 square foot Weight and Fitness Area has a combination of cardiovascular equipment, selectorized weight machines, plate loaded weight equipment and free weights. In terms of cardiovascular machines, which include stair climbers, bikes, treadmills, skiers, rowers and various other machines, we have gone from 35 pieces to more than 100 machines. Twenty pieces of cardiovascular equipment will be positioned in various areas adjacent to the new mall track.

We more than doubled the amount of selectorized Cybex machines that we had in the original weight room. The new pieces are located in the new area and the original equipment has been moved off the mall track main entrance in a circuit configuration. K-State and a Club in Venice, CA are presently the only two places that have the new Cybex VR2 machines. K-Stater's should be proud to be on the cutting edge of the fitness industry.

The plate loaded and free weight equipment is on the south side of the Weight and Fitness Area. The plate loaded pieces are new to K-State. Plate loaded machines are in a fixed position, however, the participant determines the amount of weight to be lifted by adding weight plates. Additions to the free weight area are new benches and seats, a new set of dumbells, and weight plates.

Additionally, we have added Weight and Fitness Supervisors during building hours to assist with questions and checkout of equipment specific to the Weight and Fitness Area.

Fitness Facts

Cycling outdoors or on an indoor exercise bike is one of the most popular and healthful aerobic sports. Follow these tips for eliminating pressure on your knees. Set the saddle at the proper height. Your knee should be slightly bent at the bottom of the stroke. If the seat is too low, your knee will be too bent and cause you to wobble and lose stroking power. If the seat is too high causing your knee not to bend at all or having you reach for the pedal, you can stress the knee joint. Use the appropriate gear. If you crank along slowly in high gear, you will increase the pressure in your knee joints while decreasing any aerobic benefits. Aim for a regular cadence of 70 to 80 revolutions per minute.

Cool Cats

Jazz great Maynard Ferguson delights crowd at Cool Cats Jazz Festival

Nolan Schramm
arts and entertainment editor

Maynard Ferguson has been playing the trumpet for 40 years. While some people would consider this more of a punishment, Ferguson only does it for one reason.

"You just do it because you love it," he said. "I refer to my instruments as my favorite toys."

Ferguson, hailed internationally as one of the greatest jazz trumpeters to grace the scene, played Monday at Sunset Zoo's sixth-annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival.

Before the show, the doctor of jazz gave tips and suggestions to young cats trying to learn the trade, as part of what the handbill calls jazz clinics.

"It makes it sound like some kind of disease," Ferguson said. "You don't try to teach them individual techniques, but it's very important for them to see how it is."

Students received general encouragement from Ferguson, then split into smaller groups, giving them a chance to learn from the seasoned players in Ferguson's Big Bop Nouveau band.

Sax players went with sax players. Percussion-lovers went with keyboardists/percussionists. And trumpeters learned from Ferguson. One can tell he cares about the future of young musicians.

"I am now signed as a producer for young, great players," Ferguson said. "That's sort of the direction I've gone in since I was 9 years of age."

The music began around noon with the Manhattan Jazz Orchestra, an 18-member band composed of regional musicians.

At the same time, Dick Wright was exhibiting his collection of rare jazz films.

By the time Musa Nova was warming up, so was the humid Kansas day. A line of people stretched back to the Wildlife Theater. Many of them were standing in line to pay 25 cents for a cup of water.

Other people sat on blankets under the various trees that dotted the landscape near the stage area. Still others chose to be seated directly in front of the humongous stack of amplified speakers.

Musa Nova left its sonic footprint in Sunset Zoo by playing a unique brand of Latin jazz. Formed from the classical guitar sounds of Danny Embrey, the funky bass of James Jeffley and the cymbalic percussion of Gary Helm, this band was a force to be reckoned with.

The throaty, dynamic voice of lead singer Angela Hagenback could dip to incredible lows, holding an enthralling tremolo that could send an entire stadium on a trip to another land.

The Latin sound was tinged with modern influence, and keyboardist Joe Cartwright breathed the electronic soul into the band with his penetrating work on keyboards.

A hearty smattering of applause reverberated across the audience as Musa Nova finished its set.

Ferguson took the stage with his band. The jolly man was wearing a long-sleeved flannel shirt, complete with suspenders. A gray tuft of hair perched atop his head.

The day was hot, but these cats were cool.

Ferguson blasted notes through trumpets and coronets, climbing to incredible highs and holding bizarre tremolos. This is the man who is recognized internationally as one of the world's greatest trumpet players.

At a young age, he had no idea.

"I never thought I'd get into it. I was an artist, not a trumpet player," Ferguson said. "But I've won lots of awards."

Several of those awards came after the movie "Rocky" was released in the mid-'70s, featuring Ferguson's band performing the theme song.

The album went gold, catapulting Ferguson and his band into the pop charts. But extra fame didn't faze the master blaster.

"I just thought it was a great fusion tune, a good melody for that type of thing," he said. "I knew I wanted to do something trumpetistic."

Time hasn't changed that style.

"This is prominently a straight-ahead jazz band," Ferguson said. "What

▶ COMMON ANCESTRY

Relatives share name, not color

Associated Press

HARRISONBURG, Va. — Darrell Hairston comes from a large, proud black family that holds big reunions and boasts relatives in more than a dozen states. Their motto: "We call everybody cuz."

That adage was put to the test when he began a fellowship at Eastern Mennonite University and got a friendly call from the head groundskeeper who shared the same last name — a white man named Will Hairston.

As they spoke, the names and places common to their ancestry led them to an inescapable conclusion: Darrell Hairston's ancestors were slaves owned by Will Hairston's forebears.

"There was a certain amount of anger in me," Darrell Hairston said. "Slavery, and all that it means, is not very pretty."

So, when Will Hairston suggested the two meet and talk further, Darrell Hairston balked. But Will persisted. Confused, Darrell consulted relatives, his boss in the university's Office of Multicultural Affairs, where he has a yearlong fellowship, and his Baptist pastor back home in Martinsville.

Darrell eventually decided the meeting was a chance for rare, if painful personal insight. They met at a campus sandwich shop.

"I was worried," Will Hairston said. "I had the feeling, 'Is he going to be angry? Is he going to be resentful?' I can see how he would be."

And Will said he was nervous about his own reaction. "I didn't know if I'd be able to sit down and not be overcome by guilt."

The men were uncomfortable at first but were drawn together by their common history. Week passed, and they decided to meet again and again.

After several informal talks and research on both sides, the two decided to present their story to the campus at a prayer service.

Both families are rooted in the tobacco-growing Southside region of Virginia around Oak Hill. At the onset of the Civil War, Will Hairston's great-great-great-grandfather, Samuel Hairston, owned 1,600 slaves who tended his family's various farms.

After the war, Darrell's ancestors took their names from their erstwhile masters, as did thousands of other newly emancipated slaves.

Will, 34, and Darrell Hairston, 25, have not pinpointed a blood relation, but said they believe that link is inevitable, given the frequency of slave-slaveholder unions.

▶ AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Brownback urges caution before changing programs

Associated Press

TOPEKA— Americans should think long and hard before encouraging changes in affirmative-action hiring programs, U.S. Rep. Sam Brownback told a gathering on the topic.

"Acting too quickly could lead to serious, long-term problems," Brownback, R-Kan., said Saturday at a forum sponsored by Bias Busters of Kansas, an organization that works to fight racism.

Brownback noted that racism has been a high-profile issue lately, with attention focused nationally on racist comments made by a key police detective in the O.J. Simpson trial and locally on racist graffiti that turned up last week at Topeka West High School.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled earlier this summer that federal affirmative action programs must meet the same strict standards as those at the state and local levels.

That decision made parts of federal affirmative action unconstitutional, and some in Congress favor dismantling the rest.

But Americans shouldn't do so, Brownback said, until they study the question and decide what other steps would provide a level playing field for all races.

"This thing is really dynamic now," Brownback said. "It's not set just which way things are going to go, and I think that's good."

The freshman congressman said he has met twice with 15-member panels to discuss what to do next about the issue.

"I'm trying to find a model to follow," he said.

One such model, Brownback said, might be the military.

He said the military seems to be a place where minorities have an opportunity for advancement and membership is made up of a representative cross-section of ethnic groups.

Enrollment might fall because of downsizing

Mary Emerson
staff writer

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 is paying close attention to its enrollment figures to see if the downsizing at Fort Riley will affect the numbers.

"Our numbers are going to be down some, but it's hard to tell," Dan Yunk, USD 383 superintendent of schools, said.

Yunk said there are families leaving the fort, but new families are coming in. He said it is difficult at this point to know how changes at the fort will affect enrollment.

The official enrollment count will not be available until Sept. 20 because the district allows enrollment of students through the Labor Day holiday, he said.

Preliminary counts show the kindergarten classes being up by about 50 students, but the overall elementary school count is down a little more than 100. There are no figures available for Manhattan Middle or Manhattan High schools, but they appear to be holding close to last year's or even up a little, Yunk said.

There are two reasons the final count is important to the district.

The first factor is Bergman Elementary School, which opened at the beginning of the semester, and the two new middle schools the district is building.

If there are fewer students than expected, the new and existing buildings might not quite be at full capacity.

The new schools, Dwight D. Eisenhower and Susan B. Anthony Middle schools, will be open next year.

"Right now, there are over 1,000 students in our one middle school. The new schools will each hold 600 students. We are taking one large school and breaking it up into two smaller schools," said Carol Schleif, administrative assistant to the superintendent and clerk to the Board of Education.

When the new schools are opened, Manhattan Middle School, the existing middle school, will be used by ninth-grade students who are overflowing from Manhattan High, she said.

"At the high school, we've got 1,900 students in a building built for 1,400," Schleif said.

Manhattan High has been overcrowded for a while, which is the reason freshman students will be shifted to the old middle school, forming a Manhattan High East-West campus.

GOLDEN KEY WINS INTERNATIONAL AWARD FOR 11TH STRAIGHT YEAR

K-State's Golden Key Honorary received a Key Chapter Award for the 11th-consecutive year at the international convention in Washington, D.C.

"I believe we get it every year because we are so active and have good leadership," Aaron Clanton, historian for Golden Key, said.

This is the first year any chapter has earned the award for 11 consecutive years, he said.

Golden Key is a voluntary national organization of juniors and seniors in the top 10-15 percent of the nation's colleges and universities. The K-State chapter has about 700 members, Michelle Brock, president of Golden Key, said.

"You can join, and you can be as active or inactive as you want to be," she said.

The K-State Golden Key chapter, which began in 1981, stays active throughout the school year.

"Key helps with things like the blood drive," Brock said.

The organization also sponsors honoree dinners for faculty and an informational meeting for potential scholarship recipients, Clanton said.

Competing for the Key Chapter Award included submitting an application that detailed the chapter's activities during the school year. The application included letters, memos and descriptions of the organizations involvement in activities, Clanton said.

Twenty-nine chapters were awarded the Key Award this year, Clanton said.

Each chapter is also required to submit two written articles concerning the groups activities. Fifty articles are chosen and will be used in Concepts, the Golden Key national magazine, Brock said.

The annual magazine, which is distributed to all Golden Key members, will include an article written by Brock.

CLINTON STARTS '96 CAMPAIGN

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Climbing a steep hill to a fence topped with barbed wire, President Clinton thrust his arm between strips of jagged metal and shook hands with a frenzied late-night crowd.

Aides rolled their eyes, both bemused and impressed by the lengths their boss will go to court Californians.

"One year and two months to the election?" a top aide said, laughing.

Labor Day, the traditional start to the political season, brought Clinton to a state he must win at a time he plans to intensify his campaign.

Fresh from a 17-day vacation and a weekend mix of work and play in Hawaii, the president arrived Sunday night to dedicate a new college and attend a holiday picnic in Fresno.

But the main purpose of this two-day trip is politics.

So far, the president has succeeded at keeping his second-term ambitions from coloring everything he does, though he told reporters months ago he would run for re-election and has hosted several million-dollar fund-raisers.

Campaign offices are small, with few employees. Top campaign titles are still unfilled. And the president, aides said, has spent little time on election politics.

PICKETERS DELAY NEWSPAPERS

STERLING HEIGHTS, Mich. (AP) — A seven-week Detroit newspaper strike boiled over on Labor Day weekend, with 3,000 demonstrators forming a human wall around a printing plant, some jabbing at police with their signs and officers responding with pepper spray.

When it was over, Sunday's combined editions of the Detroit News and Free Press were more than 12 hours late rolling out of the plant, and eight protesters were arrested. Both sides claimed the upper hand.

"This has to be considered a complete victory," said Al Derey, chairman of the Metropolitan Council of Newspaper Unions.

Through Saturday night and into Sunday morning, pickets blocked the front of newspaper plant's entrance, many of them chanting: "They shall not pass — we will not move," hitting the sticks of their signs rhythmically on the ground.

After the number of pickets dwindled to about 50 at 8:30 a.m. Sunday, police cleared a way for a caravan of delivery trucks carrying 1 million copies of the newspaper, many of which didn't make it to readers' homes until the afternoon.

Management condemned the protest as mob rule and lawlessness and apologized to readers and advertisers for the delay.

Schools forced to cut budget

Mary Emerson
staff writer

With the failure of the local option-budget tax increase during the summer, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 has had to play the budget-cutting game.

"Things will be very tight in school finance," Dan Yunk, USD 383 superintendent of schools, said. "We are going to have to live within the means of our general fund budget and wait until our enrollment figures are final."

The proposed LOB would have increased the school-property taxes from 3 percent to 15 percent, in order to fund the school district's budget, three new schools, a comprehensive technology plan and salary raises for all USD 383 staff members.

Without the money, the school district has had to make cuts to the budget.

"We've made cuts all along the budget, and we haven't renewed contracts," said Jackie Walters, director of business services for USD 383.

The net budget for the 1995-96 school year has been set at $40,019,236 and is based on weighted full-time equivalent (FTE) enrollment of 6,830 students, which is close to last year's figures, she said.

Although the overall net budget increased, the general operating budget decreased by $52,858.

Lower enrollment figures can also hurt the district budget. The number of students enrolled in USD 383 affects the amount of money the schools receive from the state government.

Fewer students mean less money, but the district will be able to count some of the students it might lose throughout the year because of a recent bill introduced by Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan.

"Thanks to a bill by Lana Oleen, if we lose 200 students, we still get to count 90 percent, or 180 of those students, in our budget. That gives us a little breathing room this year," Yunk said.

The bill was passed mainly to protect schools faced with the uncertainty of enrollment figures because of situations like the downsizing at Fort Riley, he said.

There is another problem facing USD 383's funding.

Yunk said a ruling at the federal level that allows people to pay property taxes twice a year instead of once could be made. This ruling would mean states would receive tax funds in January and July, instead of just January.

"Our fiscal year ends June 31, and not getting all of our tax dollars before that could be a problem," he said. "If this happens, it will have a big impact on schools all over, not just ours."

The newly opened Bergman Elementary School and construction of the two new middle schools are not in jeopardy without the funds from the LOB. The construction and furnishing of the buildings is paid for by $25.8-million in bond issues, Walters said.

The money from the LOB was needed to help pay the the new schools' operational costs, such as utilities.

"Bergman is OK, but next year, we're going to be hard-pressed with the opening of the new middle schools. We'll have to make cuts. That's been the discussion all along if the LOB failed," she said.

The technology plan, which would put computers in every classroom and connect all school buildings with on-line communications, is a different story.

"It is slowing down the technology plan. We had planned to have all of the grade schools cabled, but we are now still in the process," Walters said. "As far as further implementation, we are still planning and seeing how many dollars are available to purchase the equipment needed."

Most of the technology plan is being paid for with bond money, but money from the LOB was going to be contributed to implement the plan.

The staff of the school district has also been affected.

Instead of the proposed 3-percent pay raise, the staff has only received a 1.5-percent raise.

That 1.5 percent equals a $325-increase a year on a base salary, said Marcia Herman, chief negotiator for the Kansas chapter of the National Education Association for the school district.

The teachers received a $200 raise last year. This year, the raise is $325. Everyone receives the base raise, and then a step increase for each year of service is added, which ranges from $570 to $675, she said.

Herman said most of the faculty have been understanding of the district's budget problems. Despite the raise being lower than what the teachers wanted, 85 percent of the faculty voted to accept its new contract two weeks ago.

"Everyone would have preferred the raise to be above that, but people understand there is only so much money available," she said.

Not renewing contracts is another way the staff has been affected.

"One of the three counselors at the middle school and high school was not rehired. That gives the other counselors more to do. It is affecting their workload. They did rehire teachers at the middle school and high school, so classroom sizes haven't increased," Herman said.

Some staff at the elementary schools were not rehired, and positions were not filled, but there is no concrete information yet on what kind of effect it is having on the schools, Herman said.

When the final enrollment figures are available on Sept. 20, the district will have a better idea of how much money it will receive from the state to compare with the estimated figures in the budget.

"We'll have to wait for the final enrollment audit to see where we stand," Yunk said.

"We realize the budget is tight and will probably be even tighter next year. We are going to be frugal. We also know that it's not just our school, but schools across the state."

USD 383 budget woes

Although the overall Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 net expenditures has increased, the general operating budget has decreased. Construction of two new middle schools, a new elementary school and implementation of a technology program have increased the school's budget needs. A local option budget issue that would have raised more funds for the school district failed this summer. Without significant increases in state or local funding, cuts had to be made in the form of a lower pay increase for faculty and a hiring freeze.

of USD 383, said there will not be a problem unless there is a large decrease.

"We're already at 90-percent capacity at the existing schools. If we have a sizable decrease, that will be a problem, but if it's 100 students spread out over the entire district, it isn't a big deal," he said.

Another reason the school district is concerned about its enrollment figures involves the budget for the school year.

If enrollment is less than estimated, the district will receive less money from the state government.

"There's still a lot of uncertainty about the budget because of enrollment, which we won't know until our final count comes in. We know it will be down, but we're not sure how much," Jackie Walters, director of business services for USD 383, said.

All the district can do is wait and see where the numbers fall on Sept. 20 to find out the effect of the turnover at Fort Riley.

"We look at it this way: We've got 10 elementary schools. If we are down 100 students, that would be 10 students a building," Mickey said. "That's not a noticeable decrease."

Volunteers needed for campus escourt service

The need for escourts was not met this weekend, when there weren't volunteers for the holiday weekend.

The campus escourt service needs you.

The Wildcat Walk program is working right now with about 40 volunteers — 100 less than last year, although applications are still coming in right now.

The need for escourts was not met this weekend, when there weren't volunteers for the holiday weekend.

Calls for escourts went to the K-State police twice this weekend when nobody at the Wildcat Walk was available to escourt students home.

The police escourted the first callers, and Ford Hall staff escourted the second.

Having more volunteers than necessary is what will ensure this won't happen again.

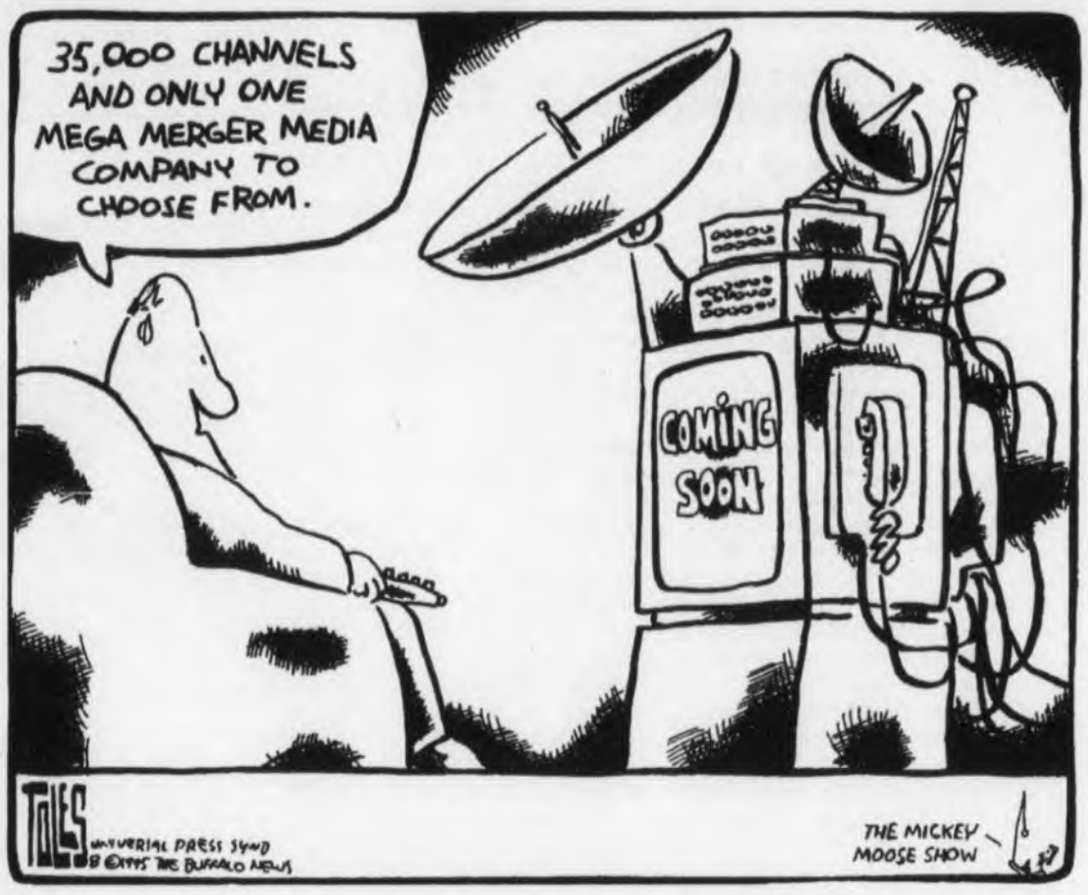
What if those callers hadn't called the campus police and walked alone?

The escourt service isn't to blame; it was a holiday weekend, and nobody was available to help.

If the service had another 100 volunteers, somebody probably could have helped out.

Donating your time one night a month ensures that somebody will be there for you every other night.

If nobody helps, nobody will help you when you need it.



We shouldn't count on campus police or residence hall staff members to make time to escourt us; they have other duties to perform.

So sacrifice one night a month to help keep the campus safe.

You can apply at a residence-hall front desk or contact Jason Oblander, coordinator of the Wildcat Walk application process.

Let's make every night a safe night to walk on campus.

Incorporation ruins farming

COLUMN

LACH FRANQUEMONT

One of the most disturbing trends in American life is the rise of corporate farming at the expense of small family farms.

These corporations, often located far from the land they own, care little for the ecological effect of their policies and even less for the economic health of the rural areas around the farms.

Also of concern are absentee owners who own the farms primarily as a tax break and to receive federal subsidies.

Farm subsidies were originally set up to ensure an adequate cheap food supply, and most importantly perhaps, give farmers an adequate means of supporting their families. Since 1985, it has also provided bonus incentives for good environmental practices. Today, much of this has been turned around, with the bulk of farm subsidies going to huge corporate farms and well-off, urban owners.

The Environmental Working Group has recently exposed some of this corruption. Huge amounts of money were traced to some decidedly non-agricultural cities. For example, Phoenix, which I can tell you from personal experience doesn't have many farms in the city limits, received $71.6 million in farm subsidies between 1985 and 1994. Miami received $54.5 million in the same time frame. Close to home, Kansas City, Mo., received $48.3 million.

One absentee farmer we are all familiar with is good ole' rancher boy Sam Donaldson of ABC News. Donaldson owns a ranch in Lincoln County, New Mexico, where he runs sheep and Angora goats.

Of course, all the subsidy checks for this operation go to Mr. Donaldson's address in the Virginia suburbs of Washington. The Wall Street Journal reports that in the last two years, sheep-lover Donaldson has received $97,000 to help him keep his head above water.

In addition, he has received substantial government help in upgrading facilities at the ranch.

This year, the Republicans are under extreme pressure to make substantial cuts in farm subsidies. In a lose-lose situation, they must do one of two things. Either piss off large chunks of Midwest constituency as well as the even more-important corporate contributors by cutting heavily into subsidies, or show the world what hypocrites they've been about the whole budget-slashing issue.

As is typical of Republicans not being able to comprehend more than one concept at a time, they have failed to look for good compromises. One of the few that has at least attempted to do good work is one of our state's representatives, U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts (R-Ks). In his Freedom to Farm act, Roberts closes some loopholes in payment limitation that solely benefit large farms.

Doing an even better job are several Midwestern Senate Democrats. They advocate two tiers of support. The higher-tier would provide more benefits to moderate and small scale farms with the lower-tier going to large farms.

One of the most interesting trends in agriculture is the switch that many are now making to more sustainable agriculture. Sustainable agriculture is using farming practices that have minimal ecological effect.

For years, the dominant wisdom was that our food supply depended on monocultural, conventional agriculture and heavy chemical use. Many studies are now challenging this view. According to the Northwest Area Foundation, crop yields aren't substantially affected with proper rotation and net profit can even be higher in certain instances.

One of the things driving this boom is an increased university emphasis on sustainable practices, including at those K-State. Stan Cox, research geneticist for the USDA and adjunct professor of agronomy, said, "The attitude is definitely changing toward it. Here in agronomy, we've just hired an extension sustainable agriculture agent."

Paula Bramel-Cox, associate professor of agronomy and a member of the board of directors at the Land Institute in Salina, just spent a considerable amount of time in Washington working with the Campaign for Sustainable Agriculture, an organization of 685 grassroots organizations working for a fair food system.

She cites considerable gains made such as the keeping of research money for sustainable agriculture and setting standards for organic produce.

This is the direction that we need to be going in. The conventional practices of the last 50 years are destroying the land. Land is a great gift and it cannot be truly appreciated or loved by those who do not live on it and work it.

As a country, we need to do all we can to promote sustainable family farms. If we, as a species, are going to survive, it will not be through corporate control of everything.

Movies reflect different cultures

I'll admit it, I'm not the most wordly of travelers. Truthfully, I get just as excited about what sort of video games a country has to offer as I get about whatever monuments it might have. I'm as likely to be looking at a pretty woman in a museum as I am to be looking at a Botticelli.

Consequently, one of the things I choose to investigate when I go to a new country is how each culture presents movies.

In Italy, for example, they do things pretty much the same way as they do here, but all the theaters are still very old and ornate. And every film is dubbed into Italian, even if it is an Italian-language film.

In England, they post the time when the advertisements and previews start with the time the actual movie starts (usually about 20 minutes later). Still, everybody shows up for the ads.

In Amsterdam, there is a 20-minute intermission between reels so you can go get another bottle of beer, or whatever.

All three of these are a lot better than the way we watch movies in America.

The American movie experience degrades further every year. We sit in long tubes, eating expensive, but disgusting movie food. The movie-and-preview combination is designed for maximum advertising and minimum content or quality.

European-made films are often more interesting than American (especially Hollywood) films.

Some follow the same cheesy formulas as Hollywood, but others are strange and meandering (like this column), held together only by artistic theme or vision (unlike this column).

This isn't very surprising to me, though.

In Europe, it quickly becomes obvious that Europeans, for the most part, have not been nearly as inundated and transformed by the movie/television experience.

Americans seem to always be forcing their lives into a Hollywood formula.

We expect that once we zap the bad guy and get the girl, we will live happily ever after, or at least cut to a commercial.

Life doesn't work that way.

We look at the world through sitcom lenses, and our social lives start to resemble soap operas (where the characters aren't as rich or beautiful).

I was in a small town in Switzerland on Swiss Independence Day, and I saw one of the most impressive fireworks displays I've ever seen.

There were so few people in the town that we could all sit almost directly under the explosions, and the fireworks filled the whole sky.

This American tourist sitting near by was filming the display with his camcorder, and I asked him whether he could see much through the eyepiece.

I'm not even sure he knew how much of the sky was lit up.

"Sure, sure," he said. "This will look great when I get it home!"

There's something seriously warped about that, but I got the feeling that he really would enjoy his vacation more once he was sitting on his couch at home, eating pizza.

I've been trying to think of something bad that this incident resembles, but I've come up empty.

It's not like anything. It is a totally new bad thing. (Well, not totally new. Before camcorders, it was cameras and slide shows).

It reminds me, though, of the three-hour ritual of wedding photographs, a purgatorial experience that keeps the guests milling around while the wedding party gets its pictures taken in every possible combination.

The pain of the wedding shoot is traded for the insurance of tangible links to memory.

It is one of the worst examples of people failing to live in the present.

We watch a lot of television in this country. Everybody in every state probably knows how Beavis and Butthead laugh.

I'm afraid that we want our lives to be like television and movies so much that we are doomed to always be disappointed.

Worse, if we can't watch the memorable moments of our life on video, or at least look at photographs, we start to feel like maybe it didn't happen...

Even writing a column like this, that has no rising action, fiery climax, and happy ending, is much too stressful for me.

From now on, I'm writing only Hollywood-style pieces.

Next week: After being bitten by a radioactive Senate Majority Leader, Bill Clinton gains superpowers: the strength and speed of a spin-doctored Republican!

Able to order NATO strikes with a firm voice!

Able to leap political sticky spots with a single sound-byte!

▶ COLLEGIAN SUCKS

Editor,

Since I transferred up to K-State two years ago, I have noticed a definite change in the reporting capabilities of the Collegian. It used to be informative 90 percent of the time.

However, in the past year, it has become a forum for outspoken individuals to express their personal ideology.

I, for one, am very upset with the type of "crap" that has been appearing. At one time, we were informed of upcoming events and functions that had substance. It has been very difficult for me to get anything that could be regarded as news from the Collegian during the past 18 months.

This year, the Collegian has moved a step up, but it is still miles below what it started out to be. If people want to have personal opinions, that's fine. But don't turn the paper into a "this is how I feel" publication for any student that thinks he's just an animal.

Yes, I am referring to Kevyn Jacobs' last column. But I don't want to single him out. The only things that have had substance in the past week have been the sports section and the Associated Press section.

It's just my opinion, but I think that there is a larger portion on this campus that feel the same way I do.

▶ EDITORIAL IGNORANCE

Editor,

First off, let me just say that I think that Bob Dole is a first-class jerk and a hypocrite. Apparently, you agree with me (or vice-versa), but I don't see what your opinion of him has to do with whether or not he masturbates. "Wanker" is a British term for a person who likes to "jerk off."

In short, I found your column to be in very poor taste. You claim you were ignorant to the meaning of "wanker."

Well, now that you know, I think you ought to re-think your diction, and in the future, don't use words that you don't understand, and try to stick to issues you know something about — I seriously doubt that you know anything about Dole's sex life.

Faceless romance

Students are finding a new way to pick up on the Internet

story by Scott Allen Miller

design by Stephanie Fuqua

Interactive forums on the Internet in which people from around the world can meet, chat and get to know each other have changed the way some people are finding romance.

These media allow people to type to each other as if they were speaking face to face. Forums such as IRC (Internet Relay Chat), America On-Line chat rooms, and Lintilla are in real time, which means response is almost always immediate. Others, like bulletin boards, personal ads and e-mail, are asynchronous and require time for others to write back.

Romantic notions have been passing through K-State's connection to the Internet. Just ask Shelley Lillard, junior in pre-nursing, how easy it is to meet a special someone over the Internet.

Sometime last May, Lillard used ftp to connect to Lintilla, a real-time chat forum that is a part of Sweden's Multiple World Talker Project. Her willingness to help a new Lintilla user introduced her to Shane Finnister of Norristown, Pa.

"He was a newbie and I was helping him with commands," Lillard said. Within weeks, they were chatting in private rooms on Lintilla, getting to know each other better.

It wasn't too long before Lillard gave Finnister a telephone call.

"I had got a very good picture of him," she said. "But talking to him on the phone was better. He had a very nice voice."

The two had been sending e-mail to each other already, so Lillard sent some pictures of herself through the more traditional mail system.

About a week before school started, Lillard's plane touched down at Philadelphia International Airport. Lillard stayed in Finnister's home north of Philadelphia for almost a week.

"We spent the whole entire time together," she said.

Their relationship was about to take a dramatic turn.

Kristin Hermes, sophomore in mass communications and French, also met someone on the Internet.

While Hermes was a senior in high school, she logged into an AOL-chat room seeking someone who could speak French and met a fellow named Ben from Spokane.

The two began e-mailing and sparks began to fly between them. They were e-mailing each other 4 to 5 times a week.

"A lot of people base their relationship on outside looks because that's how people get to know each other," Hermes said. "But we got to know each other from the inside out."

Hermes flew out to Spokane in May 1994, less than a month after she first heard his voice on the telephone. The two were hitting it off but couldn't face the prospect of Kristin going back to Kansas to begin college while Ben finished his senior year of high school.

Return to Leawood she did. But Ben came to Leawood the following July.

Hermes began to attend K-State after she graduated from high school. She managed to make it out to Spokane for Christmas, though. The two also went to Europe together this summer as part of a trip Ben's mother, a school teacher, was sponsoring.

Their story doesn't end there. While Ben was visiting Kansas last summer, he took a trip to K-State and liked it. After writing each other more than once a day last year, they have been reunited again.

"He wouldn't have come here if I weren't here, but I'm not the only reason," Kristin said about Ben Cartwright, freshman in journalism.

He was offered some advanced course placement from the English department for his creative writing and a scholarship for his work at his high school newspaper, Cartwright said.

All is not always happy-ever-after on the Internet. Some users are the targets of unwelcome and often rude advances by other users. This harassment has been known to continue off the Internet as well.

"There's lots of scary people out there," Lillard said.

"You have to be careful who you talk to and what you tell them."

Lillard said she doesn't get too ruffled about men soliciting her attention.

"I've gotten used to it," she said. "I'm really nice about it. I've learned not to take it personally."

"Kristin and I really lucked out," Cartwright said.

"I wouldn't recommend anyone to try to meet that way. We were both naive to the Internet at the time."

Hermes said she agrees.

"I wouldn't recommend it because it's scary," she said. "There's a lot of weird people out there. I got really lucky."

The Internet can give a certain amount of anonymity to users. This can be good for security, but it makes it difficult to be sure who is really typing on that other keyboard.

"When you meet someone on the Internet you don't know if they're being genuine or if it's just a personality they have invented," Cartwright said.

He said although Hermes had talked to him on the telephone, she took precautions when she first went to Spokane in case Ben had used the Internet's anonymous nature to misrepresent himself.

"She was going to hide in the airport bathroom, and she had her credit card, so she could leave if I turned out to be some 50 year-old named Bud," Cartwright said.

Besides being risky, the Internet isn't exactly the best place to meet a person to date, Hermes said.

"A lot of people go looking on the Internet for a relationship, and we didn't," she said. "It just happened."

Lillard said she also believes the Internet isn't ideal for relationships. She said she believes the Internet is best for bringing a local people together to meet or for helping those who are already friends keep their contacts.

Anything else should best be kept as casual contact, she said.

"I think if someone is interested in it they have to stay in their real life," she said. "But if they just want to talk to other people or ask questions that's OK."

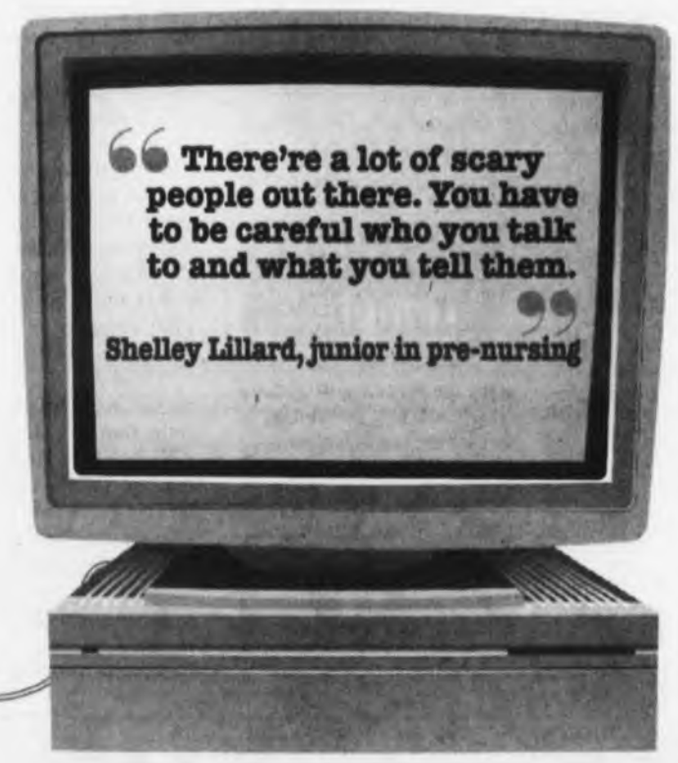
Cartwright also said he agrees.

"I'm kind of bored with most real-time forums," he said. "I see it as a way to talk to friends and family in Washington. I won't just go to a regular chat room and meet people anymore."

Lintilla is dominated by users from the east coast, Lillard said. That's why she said prefers IRC to Lintilla now.

"I like IRC a lot better because I can tell who is from K-State," she said.

Most IRC users from K-State have the domain of (ksu.edu) somehow attached to their nicks, or IRC names, making them easy to identify as local users.



So the Internet can, like so many other things in life, be a way to bring people closer together.

But what about Shelley and Shane? After she arrived in Norristown, Pa., the two made a decision about how much the Internet was — or was not — going to be able to bring them together.

"I doubt I'll ever see him again," she said. "We both felt the same way."

Shelley isn't sad, though.

"I don't regret it, because I did have a real good time," she said.

Cats rout Temple, 34-7

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

The first 62 seconds weren't pretty, but fortunately for the 1995 K-State football team, the rest of Saturday's game against Temple went according to schedule.

The offense was able to overcome a fumble by sophomore running back Eric Hickson on the second play of the game, and the defense fought back from a 58-yard scoring strike on the first Owl play of the game to help coach Bill Snyder and the Wildcats to a 34-7 victory in the season opener against the Temple Owls.

"Nobody panicked," Snyder said of the Cats' early deficit. "We've been there before."

"I didn't think we threw the ball very well. We completed a few passes, but I don't think we threw it the way we're capable of."

BILL SNYDER
K-STATE FOOTBALL COACH

K-State 34
Temple 7

Cornerback Joe Gordon said he agreed with Snyder. The Cats just needed to get back their composure.

"We just needed to regroup and focus," Gordon said.

And that's just what the Wildcats did.

The Cats rolled up 331 yards of offense in the first half and 390 for the game. Hickson led the attack with 107 yards rushing, with Mike Lawrence adding 95 yards to the K-State cause. Snyder said he knew Hickson would perform well after the early fumble.

"He had to play better because he knew he didn't have but one more chance," Snyder said.

Hickson agreed.

"First I was mad, then I knew I couldn't let it get me down," Hickson said. "It was a lesson."

After the game, Snyder said there were many lessons that could be learned for the Temple game, especially on the defensive side of the ball, which allowed 270 yards of total offense, 221 yards through the air. But Snyder did not place the blame solely of the shoulders of the defensive secondary.

"We gave up some cheap yardage," Snyder said. "We've got a lot of work to do on our pass rush.

"They nickeled-and-dimed us a bit. We've got some things to shore up."

The Cats, led by linebacker Travis Ochs' seven tackles, were able to compensate for the yardage given up with timely defensive stops that left the Owls zero-for-nine on third-down conversions.

Snyder also said there was room for improvement in the play of quarterback Matt Miller, whose performance he summed up in three words.

"Very, very, average," Snyder said.

Despite an 11-for-17 day with 143 yards passing and two touchdowns, Snyder was not satisfied with Miller, who was relieved late in the third quarter by back-up Brian Kavanagh.

"I didn't think we threw the ball very well," Snyder said. "We completed a few passes, but I don't think we threw it the way we're capable of."

Miller said he saw some flaws in the performance but said they can be mended.

"We obviously did some bad things, but we can work on the bad things," Miller said.

He said not to concentrate too much on the negative.

"It was a win, so I'm happy," Miller said.

The Cats have a week of practices to work on those "bad things," before traveling to Cincinnati for a night game against the Bearcats.

Linebacker Percell Gaskins said he was ready to get back on the field and show everyone how these Cats are capable of playing.

"I'm ready to play those guys tomorrow."

Steps taken toward gender equity

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

When it comes to gender equity, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is not where it wants to be.

"The implications of being found in noncompliance would be devastating to the department and the University in every corner," athletic director Max Urick said. "So we've set out a plan to bring us in compliance."

The NCAA Self-Study Commitment to Equity Subcommittee reported Friday that steps are being taken to bring the department into conformity with both NCAA and Title IX regulations.

"A lot of what we did on this has nothing to do with certification," Urick said.

Under Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments to the Civil Rights Act of 1964, schools which receive federal funding must offer substantially equal opportunities to both male and female students.

"The NCAA doesn't say word about Title IX," said Bob Snell, professor of civil engineering and member of the Self-Study steering committee. "They state you must live up to 'fair and equitable' standards."

One criterion evaluated was the male/female ratio among student athletes compared to the overall student ratio. While about 45 percent of K-State students are female, women comprise only about 30 percent of student athletes.

To remedy this situation, the athletic department added women's crew as a varsity sport, to begin in fall 1996.

"We looked at proposals from women's crew, soccer, softball and rifle. With the numbers and the history involved, it was obvious that crew was the right choice," Urick said.

"That doesn't mean that soccer, lacrosse, etc., were not deserving — I'd like to have 40 varsity sports — but crew was the most prudent."

Some other measures the department is taking are as follows:

- Men's and women's basketball will each have equal opportunity to prime practice times.
- Coaching salaries for volleyball, men's basketball and women's basketball will all be made competitive with the top half of their peers.
- Volleyball will add one part-time administrative staff person.
- Marketing budgets for volleyball and women's basketball will increase.
- Media guides for all four showcase sports (football, volleyball, men's and women's basketball) will all follow the same format.
- Volleyball locker room facilities will be improved to be comparable with other showcase sports.
- Training table meals will be made available to volleyball and women's basketball players.
- A sports information director will travel with volleyball to away matches when deemed necessary.
- Volleyball's recruiting budget will be increased, and women's basketball's recruiting budget will be brought even with men's basketball.

These changes should help bring the department into compliance with both NCAA and federal regulations.

"It sounds like the committees and the athletic department and the university are doing a great job," said Don Rose, one of the founders of the crew team. "I'm just tickled."

San Francisco 49ers will win the race for Deion Sanders

COLUMN

SHANE McCORMICK

Let's start the bidding off at three. Do I hear four? Will anybody give me $5 million?

Those are the numbers Deion Sanders' agent, Eugene Parker, is asking for.

The Deion Sanders auction has begun.

NFL owners are dreaming of what Sanders will do for their team if he signs for them. The bad news is that NFL owners will have to wait awhile to see what Sanders will be able to do.

NFL teams courting for Sanders will have to wait until about week five of the regular season. That's when Sanders' professional baseball career is over. But the wait could have been longer for these teams.

During the middle of the season, Sanders was traded from the Cincinnati Reds to the San Francisco Giants. With the Reds almost guaranteed a playoff spot, Sanders' arrival in the NFL would have been delayed three or four more weeks. The Giants are sitting in the cellar and will probably not make the playoffs.

The list of NFL teams that are courting Sanders has grown since the beginning of the preseason, now including the San Francisco 49ers, Dallas Cowboys, Miami Dolphins, Denver Broncos, Philadelphia Eagles and the Minnesota Vikings.

There are many other teams that would love to have Sanders playing for them, but Sanders has said he will only play for a championship caliber team.

Right now the front runners in the Sanders sweepstakes seems to be San Francisco and Dallas. But the other teams still have a outside shot at landing the All-Pro cornerback.

Here's the order of how I think the race to land Sanders will end.

6. Minnesota. The Vikings really don't have much of a chance to sign Sanders. The only thing they have on their side is that they were $2.4 million less than the salary gap. But I still feel that won't be enough to bring Sanders to Minnesota. Besides, there's no way Sanders's ego could fit in Minnesota with third-string quarterback Chad May already there.

5. Denver. Yes, the Broncos are coached by former 49ers offensive coordinator Mike Shanahan, but that won't lure Sanders to Denver. There's no way Sanders would wear the ugly orange and blue uniforms of the Broncos.

4. Miami. Sanders is from Fort Meyers, Fla., and it would be a nice homecoming for him to come to Miami. But do you really think Don Shula would let him wear all of that gold?

3. Philadelphia. The Eagles could be the sleeper team in the sweepstakes. The Eagles are now coached by former 49ers defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes, with whom Sanders had a great relationship in San Francisco. The Eagles also landed Sanders' former teammate and trash-talking partner Ricky Watters.

2. Dallas. The Cowboys are just behind the 49ers in the race, but they have made huge strides to pull close to the champions. Quarterback Troy Aikman has already said he would give up the majority of his salary to help sign Sanders. Other Cowboys, Nate Newton and Emmitt Smith, have also said they would restructure their contracts to free up money for Sanders. Also, Cowboys owner Jerry Jones just recently signed an endorsement deal with Nike. Sanders is also under contract with Nike. Such endorsement possibilities could be an incentive to sign with Dallas.

1. San Francisco. As much as I hate to see it, Sanders will probably be back with the 49ers this year. There's two main reasons why I think this will happen. First, Sanders is already playing baseball in San Francisco. Sanders has said that he would love to play baseball and football in the same city. Secondly, 49ers president Carmen Policy is a master at finding ways to get around the salary cap. He did last year; he'll find a way to do it this year.

Although teams are not sure exactly what week in the season Sanders will be back for, they do know when he'll decide what team to play for.

Last week, Sanders' agent, Eugene Parker, said that his client would make his final decision on Sept. 8. So come Friday, many owners will be crying because of their lost in the quest for Sanders. But one owner will be thanking his lucky stars that he landed the best defensive player in the NFL.

Interesting statistic to think about: In 1994, "Prime Time" brought back six interceptions for over 300 yards and three touchdowns.

P.S. For any other Cowboy fans out there, I'll be holding a prayer session Thursday night. We will pray for Sanders to sign with Big D.

Miller good, but must improve

▶ K-State coach Bill Snyder said he feels Matt Miller is not yet where he needs to be.

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

In the weeks leading up to his first start as a K-State quarterback, Matt Miller didn't let nervousness set in. Practice after practice, Miller, a senior from San Diego, put on a good face.

That was until Saturday morning.

"Matt's a different kind of guy," wide receiver Mitch Running said. "You can't really tell he's nervous, but today we were talking and we got it out of him that he was a little jittery."

While he may have been nervous before the game, Miller, who hadn't started regularly since high school, showed the crowd of 34,927 he could play quarterback as he led the Wildcats past Temple 34-7 in the season opener.

Miller, who was relieved at the end of the third quarter, went 11-of-17 passing for 143 yards and two touchdowns and also rushed nine times for 32 yards.

"It's good to get the first one behind us," Miller said. "Now, I can just get down to playing football and not worrying about the other stuff."

While the crowd approved of Miller's performance, K-State coach Bill Snyder labeled Miller's performance as average.

"It was pretty average from (the standpoint) of what I expect from Matt," Snyder said. "The assessment of most people watching was that Matt played a good game. I could say it was a fine performance if we wanted an average quarterback."

Miller made some good plays, such as his perfect 15-yard lob pass to Kevin Lockett in the second quarter to give K-State a 17-7 lead. In the third quarter, Miller pinpointed a pass to a falling Tyson Schweiger in the end zone to make it 24-7.

"On the two touchdown passes, he had the touch on both of them," Snyder said.

As far as running the ball, Miller took some hard hits to get the yards. With the Cats trailing 7-3 in the first quarter, Miller had to take the hit on a down-the-line option sequence, but he pitched it to Eric Hickson just before getting nailed.

"The (Temple) linebacker was up and coming, so I went down the line and kind of tripped," Miller said. "I saw him caving in, so I pitched it."

Overall, Miller and Snyder both said there are things improve.

"That's what's good about this," Snyder said. "He hasn't played forever — not regularly since high school — and now he has a chance to go out and see what he has been practicing for all these years. He has a chance to go back and fine tune all those things."

Miller said he agreed he has some things to work on.

"I thought I did some good things, and I did some bad things," Miller said. "I can throw the ball a little better, and I should stay in the pocket a little longer."

Schweiger gave Miller passing grades.

"He can improve," Schweiger said. "I would give him a B. He ran the offense well in the first half, so a B, B+... but I'm a tough grader."

Record ticket sales pose little problem in KSU Stadium

Rachelle Harkness

To prevent students from being packed in like sardines, the student section was expanded by 1,500 seats this year.

But students found the general admission section just as packed as it was in the past.

"It's just as crowded as it was last year and the year before that," Amy Coulson, junior in marketing, said.

"The difference is more people are actually coming to the games."

Even though the section seems crowded, most students don't seem to mind the crowd.

"People who don't have student tickets sit here anyway, and that makes it more crowded," Larry Keller, junior in business, said.

"But who cares? All the students should be able to sit in this section if they want to."

Four options are available when purchasing student tickets: general admission, family plan, stand-up reserved seating and sit-down reserved seating.

Prices remain the same for all of these options.

"I think students really appreciate the different options they have," Max Urick, athletic director, said.

The most-popular section for students seems to be the general admission.

However, this year general admission sold out, and some students were forced to buy reserved seats.

To avoid being overcrowded, students are supposed to have their ticket to show the ushers they belong in the general admission.

Some students have yet to find another way to beat the system.

"I don't want to sit by a bunch of people I don't know," Laurie Lovitch, junior in mass communications, said.

"I just have three or four friends find a place to stand and then wait for one of them to bring a student ticket back to me."

Because ICAT (I Contributed A Twenty) seating is part of general admission seating, those students who purchased reserved seats along with an ICAT membership were not allowed to sit in ICAT.

The students were offered a refund of their ICAT membership.

Although some students were upset with all the confusion, for the most part, things seemed to have run smoothly with seating this year.

"I really haven't had much trouble with the crowd," Brent Thomas, an usher at the game, said.

Students have until this Friday to purchase reserved-seat student season tickets.

Netters split at Long Beach State tourney

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

The K-State volleyball team split a pair of matches at the Long Beach Tournament Friday and Saturday.

The Wildcats fell to fourth-ranked Long Beach State in four games on Friday evening 15-10, 8-15, 5-15, 10-15.

"I thought it was a good trip for us," Coach Jim Moore said. "Even though we lost the match to Long Beach, we proved, and the kids proved to themselves, that we can play with some of the top teams in the country."

In the loss to Long Beach, the Cats hit just 83 percent for the match with 36 kills and 27 errors in 108 attempts. Senior Jill Dugan led the Cats with 12 kills, while junior Kate DeClerk added 11. Sophomore Devon Ryning dished off 29 assists in the match.

The Cats came back strong on Saturday against the Utah State Aggies winning 15-4, 15-11, 15-5.

The Cats hit .444 as a team. Junior Toie Young led the way with 10 kills and hit .526 for the match, and Devon Ryning had 28 assists. Defensively, sophomore Val Phillips had eight digs while Kate DeClerk had eight block assists.

"We are capable of playing very good volleyball against very good volleyball teams," Moore said. "The kids found that out this weekend against an outstanding volleyball team."

Women's, men's runners place 1st, 2nd at Baker Invitational JV cross country meet

Phil Roberts
staff reporter

The K-State cross-country team opened the season on a high note last weekend at the Baker Invitational.

The women's team finished in first place, while the men's team ended the meet in second place.

"I was pleased on a whole," Coach Terry Drake said. "The girls and guys both had great finishes, which is something we haven't had in the past."

"I thought the women did what I thought they would do," he said.

"The men actually did better than I thought they would."

The K-State women were led by a winning performance by freshman Cristy Swartz, who turned in a time of 11:41 in the 3,200-meter course.

All five of K-State's women runners finished in the top 15.

"Cristy ran a great race, and many of the times were personal improvements, which indicates that training is going well," Drake said.

Swartz was followed by sophomore Ashlie Kinton in third, freshman Emily Diederich in fifth, freshman Lindsay Moser in 12th and Alison Canny in 15th.

Freshman Brent Stover led the K-State men's team with a sixth-place finish, covering the 5,000-meter course in 16:52. Freshman Dave Barland was next in 11th place.

Coach Drake had used this meet to get the runners ready for the bigger meets to take place later on in the season.

Drake was looking to give his younger runners experience they will need against the more-experienced runners at other schools.

"We'll run everyone at the next meet," Drake said. "We'll be running our better people."

K-State's next competition, the squad's first varsity meet, will be on Sept. 16 at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence.

Greeks don't grovel

■ New house members share responsibilities

Heidi Evert
staff reporter

Joining a greek organization involves more than attending house meetings and a few functions.

The new members of Farmhouse are required to do daily maintenance around the house and have pledge-active talks. The new members have to talk to each active for 15 minutes before they are active members.

Chad Asmus, pledge educator for Farmhouse, said pledge-active talks are a good way for the new members to get to know everybody in the house.

New Farmhouse members are also required to join one campus organization and do a community-service project. The community-service project involves pairing up with a sorority new-member class to work for any community-service organization they choose.

"They get to know some more people. Plus, a little community service never hurts," Asmus said.

The Sigma Nu new members have campus hours. They have to be on campus from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. studying. They also have house duties, study hours at night and bedtime at 11 p.m.

Ted Jovanovic, senior in food science and member of Sigma Nu, said the new members have their own sleeping area. They have to be in them by 11 p.m., but they don't have to go to bed. Jovanovic said that's their time to get to know each other.

"It's part of a concept of being a team. They have to become a small unit to become a part of the big circle," he said.

Joel Applebee, sophomore in secondary education and member of Lambda Chi Alpha, said there is no such thing as a new member or pledge. They are called associates.

"Everyone in the house is basically equal when they come in," he said.

Applebee said everyone who lives in the house shares all of the duties. The only difference between actives and associates is the actives have been initiated and learned the rituals.

John Conley, pledge trainer for Sigma Chi fraternity, said he gave the new members a choice. They had the option of deciding if the entire fraternity should go to the associate-member system, where everyone — new members and actives — share the house responsibilities.

> "We found in the past that if you force someone to do something, they don't like to do it."
> HOLLY GLOVER
> ALPHA XI DELTA NEW MEMBER ORIENTATION CHAIRWOMAN

The other option was to stay with the current system in which new members have study hours, are not allowed to go out on school nights, go to bed at midnight and have house duties for one year.

"It was a unanimous vote to stay the same. You can ask anyone in the house, and they would all say the same thing. We would rather clean for one year instead of for four years," Conley said.

The new-member programs for sororities take a different angle.

Janie Miller, senior in theater and member of Delta Delta Delta, said their new-member program is eight weeks long.

The Tri-Delt new members have no house duties, but they are required to do six study hours a week. After the first semester in the house, the number of study hours they get is determined by their GPAs.

Miller also said new members can't wear the crest, go into the chapter room or wear any gold jewelry associated with Tri-Delt until they are initiated.

"On the night of initiation, the new members are given a gold lavaliere as a gift from the house to signify their initiation," Miller said.

The new members of Pi Beta Phi have a 15-week program. They are required to do six study hours a week and phone and door duties.

Kam Cohomeier, vice president of social advancement for Pi Beta Phi, said new members have the same responsibilities as actives.

"The only thing that they don't do that we do as initiated members is they can't wear the letters. The new-member period is a learning time. After initiation, the true meaning of the letters is more special," Cohomeier said.

Holly Glover, new member orientation chairwoman for Alpha Xi Delta, said their new members can't wear the crest or lavaliere either.

The new members of Alpha Xi have an eight-week program. They have phone and door duty, but they don't have study hours.

"We found in the past that if you force someone to do something, they don't like to do it," Glover said.

Instead of study hours, the Alpha Xis have implemented a study-buddy system. Each new member is paired up with an active. That active is there to help the new member in any way possible.

"The only people who have to do study hours are the people who are on academic probation," Glover said.

Thompson examines 1992 campaign

Sara Smith
contributing writer

There is no such thing as an ex-junkie.

Or, at least that's what Hunter S. Thompson says, and he ought to know. The man who once headed to Las Vegas with enough drugs to stock a mobile police narcotics lab in the trunk and an anonymous Samoan attorney in the passenger seat has brought us his history of the 1992 presidential campaign.

"Better Than Sex: Confessions of a Political Junkie" begins with Thompson telling his son why he was the one who shot John F. Kennedy and ends with Chapter 666: The Death of Richard Nixon.

Thompson is addicted to politics (among other things, I'm sure), and that is why "Better Than Sex" works so well.

If you weren't paying attention in 1992, let Dr. Thompson give you a refresher course.

This is, of course, not exactly a book written for a political science class in which you take detailed notes on the philosophy of Andrew Jackson before going to sleep again. Thompson is, after all, the self-proclaimed pioneer of Gonzo journalism, a philosophy that allows a reporter to become part of the story and throw objectivity to the wind.

"There are a lot of ways to practice the art of journalism, and one of them is to use your art like a hammer to destroy the right people — who are almost always your enemies, for one reason or another, and who usually deserve to be crippled because they are wrong," Thompson writes.

Thank God Thompson wrote this book in chronological order, except for the flashback to his run for sheriff of Aspen, Colo., in 1970 — a campaign during which he proposed to change the name of Aspen to Fat City, take guns away from the police and set up a system to punish dishonest drug dealers.

I mean, he actually ran on this platform. He almost won, too — he lost by 4 percent of the vote.

Thompson, the man who will say anything, writes:

"Bill Clinton does not inhale marijuana, right? You bet. Like I chew on LSD but I don't swallow it."

The book is peppered with faxes, notebook scratches and memos, one of which warns the staff of Rolling Stone magazine not to allow George Bush, Patrick Buchanan or any federal police agent into the building until further notice.

There are faxes to and from George Stephanopoulos, Ed Turner at CNN, Thompson's friends on the Clinton and Perot campaigns and even from Mr. Bill himself.

The narration in this book is written in classic-Thompson style, such as the man who just swallowed a mixture of sodium pentathol and sulfuric acid. He writes what no one else will and gets away with it.

Nobody in the public eye can avoid the caustic kiss of Thompson, unless he doesn't care enough about them to bother.

This is a book well-suited for Republican masochists. It's hard to tell whom Thompson hates most — Nixon, George Bush or Ronald Reagan, but I'm putting my money on Nixon (see chapter 666).

But Democrats and liberals beware — nobody is safe, not after Thompson has spent Halloween in Little Rock, Ark., and Stephanopoulos has picked his pocket at a bar.

Thompson has been covering politics longer than Clinton has been in politics, so his perspective is unique. Heed this warning:

"This is the '90s, Bubba, and there is no such thing as paranoia. It's all true."

U.N. threatens more airstrikes against Serb troops

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Testing Serb will, the United Nations has reopened a route to Sarajevo and is threatening more air attacks if the rebel stranglehold of the capital doesn't end.

There was no sign late Sunday that rebel Serbs were obeying a demand to remove heavy weapons ringing Sarajevo. But a handful of trucks loaded with food crossed the U.N.-controlled airport into the city for the first time in six months.

Sarajevo was quiet Sunday, but sporadic gunfire and explosions of unknown origin could be hear in the late evening. U.N. officials had no reports of attacks on the other safe areas.

The United Nations, with the support of NATO ambassadors, sent Serb commander Gen. Ratko Mladic a letter spelling out its demands and threatening more airstrikes, suspended Friday to give peace talks a chance.

The letter demanded an end to attacks on Sarajevo and Bosnia's other three U.N. safe areas, a withdrawal of Serb guns to outside a 12-1/2-mile boundary around Sarajevo and complete freedom of movement for aid agencies and U.N. personnel.

▶ CATTLE DRIVE

Steers, ponies, memorabilia hit auction block

Associated Press

MILES CITY, Mont. — The longhorn steers, the saddle ponies and everything else that brought the Great American Cattle Drive from Texas to Montana went on the auction block here Sunday, two days after its six-month journey ended.

About 7,000 people attended the auction, which continued far into the night. It offered almost anything connected with the drive, from portable corral panels and trailers to the drovers' personal tack.

Western memorabilia collector Richard Howe of Yorktown, Ind., spent at least $3,600. His trophies included Carrot Top, one of the lead steers, and five limited-edition prints of a painting depicting the cattle drive.

Howe bid $2,500 for Carrot Top and $220 for each of the prints, of which only 500 were produced. The original painting, which Howe said he might try to buy in the future, is by Missouri artist Tom Mueller.

Carrot Top will have a permanent home at Howe's ranch. Howe said he does not intend to slaughter the steer for his meat or his prized hide and horns.

Howe said he will probably give one of the prints to his friend Jerry Owens, who was in charge of the outriders in the cattle drive. He said he will probably keep two of the prints for himself and sell the rest.

"I believe a lot of the things connected with this drive will increase in value," Howe said.

Early in the auction, the steers were selling for an average price of $1,100 to $2,500. Organizers of the drive had predicted $7,000 to $10,000 for the larger steers and $2,000 to $4,000 for smaller ones.

The horses were selling for as much as $6,700.

The drive began at Fort Worth, Texas, in March to commemorate the 1886 drive that brought the first cattle herd to Montana. The drive crossed portions of Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and Wyoming.

Remembering WWII

Memories of a world war from half a century ago

Holding a clip book of memorabilia from World War II, Wayland Keefover, a veteran, points to a picture of a handsome, smiling 20-year-old soldier.

"That was me," he said, reminiscing on a time the current generation can only find amongst the torn pages of history books and in the stories of their grandparents.

Keefover is far from the eager, young man who left home in 1944 to become a waist gunner on a B-17 bomber. Still donning a cap inscribed 457 Bomb Group, Keefover said the war had changed him in ways even he still can't understand.

"I think it changed me a lot," Keefover said. "I never talked about the war when I came home. In fact, my parents died, and I didn't tell them anything about it."

It was recently that Keefover, one of about 12 million U.S. soldiers who served in World War II, said he began reflecting on his experiences. Many veterans have a hard time talking about what they saw and felt, he said.

The exhibit in the Manhattan Town Center last week, honoring the 50th anniversary of the U.S. peace treaty with Japan, brought together veterans of the war. Keefover said it was a necessary reminder for everyone.

"I think this thing is good because it's making us look at it — the thing we never looked at all those years," he said. "Maybe we felt we'd feel hurt about the things we saw. Maybe we just got caught up in our jobs and lives."

Dick Jepsen, another veteran, said he went into the war as a 19 year old with a gung-ho I'm-gonna-help-win-this-war attitude.

Jepsen said all the movies one can see and all the things one can hear could not prepare you for real combat.

"It's not even remotely similar. It doesn't have the noise, it doesn't have the smell and you don't see the fear," he said.

Jepsen went to Europe in 1944 as an instrument corporal in the 42nd Infantry Division. He was transferred to the 30th Infantry Division, which was rated as the No. 1 infantry division in Europe. After the first and second gunners in his unit were killed, Jepsen became second gunner.

There were times when he and the other soldiers didn't sleep for up to seven days, Jepsen said.

"Fatigue was more of a problem than fear," he said. During those long, lonely nights, Jepsen said the soldiers discussed many things.

"We talked about survival and food. There was discussion about how this guy got shot and what he could have done. We also talked about going home and quite a bit about girls and wives," he said.

Jepsen said the mentality he and the other men walked away with affected the rest of their lives.

"I think it made it harder to have close relationships with people. People are here today, gone tomorrow, or I'm here today, gone tomorrow," Jepsen said.

Merlin Gustafson was one of the veterans at the exhibit and a speaker on Japanese war strategies in the South Pacific. He spoke to an audience mainly comprised of fellow veterans who understood every bit of the military jargon he used and devoured the details of the battles he described.

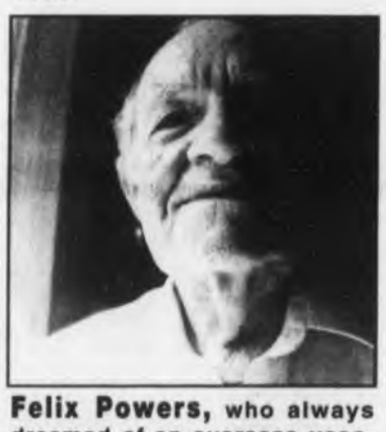
Gustafson spoke of what a mystery the kamikaze pilots were to the American soldiers.

"Our ship was hit several times by kamikazes," Gustafson said. "One Japanese kamikaze pilot could knock out an entire U.S. Navy ship."

The Shinto religion told them if they died for their country, they would go straight to heaven, Gustafson said.

He said he remembered finding the remains of a kamikaze pilot identified as Tomi Zai. The pilot had died trying to destroy Gustafson's ship, the Enterprise.

"We like to talk about American patriotism," he said, "but the Japanese were patriotic, too. That Japanese pilot was one of the most patriotic people I've ever seen."



Gustafson's voice became softer when speaking of his personal thoughts on the war. Two of his good friends had been killed in the war. One of the men named Berquist had his head blown off. The other had a shrapnel wedged through his heart.

"War is a kind of insanity," Gustafson said. "I personally never killed Japanese, but I was part of a big, killing machine."

Keefover said he realized war was necessary to protect the freedom of many, but sometimes the whole thing seemed rather insane.

"One time I was looking out the window, and this German plane came right in the opposite direction from me," Keefover said. "I can still see that guy looking at me. I didn't fire a shot and neither did he. We just looked at one another. It was such a momentous thing."

Felix Powers went into active service in October 1942. He was from a farming background and had always dreamed of vacationing overseas.

Felix Powers, who always dreamed of an overseas vacation, got one the hard way serving in the Aircorps during World War II.

He said he never imagined his trip abroad would be so hazardous. He described his trip to Norwich, England.

"We got over there in five days on the Queen Elizabeth, dodging German torpedoes all the way," Powers said.

"I escaped all the horrors of the bombings," Powers said. "There was a chance our base could have been bombed, but I guess we were lucky."

Even though Powers, who was an airplane-radio mechanic, never faced any immediate danger, he said he recalls the response of others to life-and-death situations.

"I remember one guy who was a tail gunner," Powers said. "He was a cocky guy who let on he didn't believe in God until one day when they were shooting at him. He was down on his knees praying. Maybe he started to believe in God right then."

Powers also said he remembered visiting Scotland on a short leave.

"The men were all away in the service, and when I went into a store, I was like a goldfish in a bowl. All the women were looking at me," Powers said, giggling like a little boy.

Keefover has harsher memories.

"I was wounded in September on my 24th mission," he said. "It was from flack."

Flack was the ground fire that sounded like hail on a tin roof when it hit the walls of the aircraft, Keefover said. The injury to his buttocks prompted a month hospital stay and a Purple Heart. It also broke the spell of invincibility that Keefover said affected many of the men there.

"I think it was all unreal. When we were over there, it was hard to realize that anything could touch you. It was a feeling that they were shooting at somebody else," he said. "We started living life day to day, and I think I still do."

Invasion of Japan

After the U.S. bombing of Tokyo on March 9, 1945, Japan was expected to agree to "unconditional surrender or face prompt and utter destruction." The Japanese government, however, was prepared to fight to the death, and an Allied invasion of Japan was planned.

Operation Downfall was to take place Nov. 1, 1945, but the invasion day never came. On Aug. 6, 1945, the atomic bomb, "Little Boy" was dropped on Hiroshima. Three days later, "Far Man" was dropped on Nagasaki and Japan surrendered.

Building the atomic bomb

When Los Alamos, New Mexico, was selected as the site for the Manhattan Project in 1942, a ranch school in the area had to skip Christmas vacation and finish classes by Jan. 21, 1943. The remote mountainous area became a secret government town of scientists and military police where all mail was sent to one P.O. address and censored. The laboratory that designed and built the atomic bomb officially opened April 15, 1943.

"Little Boy"

Type: Uranium
Size: 28" diameter, 10 ft. long
Weight: 8,900 pounds
Delivery aircraft: Enola Gay
Drop site: Hiroshima – Aug. 6, 1945
Drop altitude: 31,060 ft.
Detonation altitude: 1,750 ft., 43 seconds after release
Explosive yield: 20,000 tons of TNT
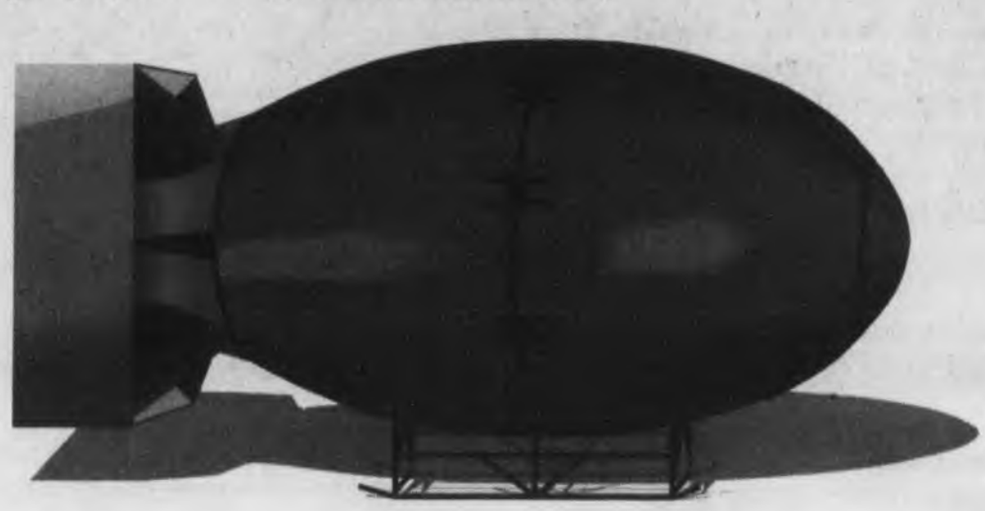
Casualties: 400,000, plus 140,000 related deaths in the next year



■ Final assembly of the Little Boy was done while airborne as a precaution in the case of accidental explosion. Only one 16mm movie camera recorded the bombing from an observer plane because of various camera malfunctions.

"Fat Man"

Type: Plutonium
Size: 60" diameter, 10 ft. 8" long
Weight: 10,800 pounds
Delivery aircraft: Bock's Car
Drop site: Nagasaki – Aug. 9, 1945
Explosive yield: same as "Little Boy"
Casualties: 70,000 by Dec. 31, 1945

■ Cloudy weather over Kokura helped spare the primary target city. "Fat Man" was taken to the secondary target city of Nagasaki.

▶ TUITION

State-run programs head off inflation

■ 7 states offer parents option
to participate in prepaid tuition investment

Associated Press

COLUMBUS— Christopher and Kay Esker are no different than most parents. They want to make sure that when their children are old enough to attend college, the money will be there.

Like many others, the Eskers have put their faith — and much of their income — into a state-run prepaid college tuition program.

At least 12 states have authorized such programs, but only seven have implemented them: Alabama, Alaska, Florida, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Such plans generally allow parents to purchase tuition credits at today's prices to cover instructional costs at a state college when their child is ready.

The state pools the payments in investments aimed at covering future tuition increases.

Not everybody is convinced the concept works. Critics say the payoff barely keeps up with the rate of inflation.

And some states backed away from the idea after the Internal Revenue Service decided to tax the investment earnings of the Michigan Education Trust, the first such program in the nation. An appellate court overruled the IRS in November.

The tax question has prevented some parents from entering into prepaid tuition plans, said Barbara Jennings, executive director of the Ohio Tuition Trust Authority.

Since the Legislature created the OTTA in 1989, parents have enrolled 41,000 children and invested $155 million.

"We know we're meeting a very important demand," Jennings said.

Pennsylvania's Tuition Account Program, which started in 1993, has 12,500 participants and $35 million in assets.

"We haven't had an advertising budget to work with, so it's a slowly spreading story," Executive Director Joseph Rice Jr. said.

"The people who have the information and understand the program are participating."

Operators of state programs are watching a federal court in New Jersey, where College Savings Bank of Princeton, N.J., has launched a patent protection battle against the Florida program. The case is expected to go to trial in about a year.

The bank contends that the Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Board infringed on a patented investment technique it uses to guarantee investors' savings will keep up with rising tuition costs. College Savings Bank wants a 25 percent annual royalty.

The Ohio program currently sells prepaid tuition units for $37.50 each, although administrators on Thursday approved a $2-per-unit increase to take effect Oct. 1.

The cost of one year's tuition at the average state-run public university is covered by about 100 units, depending on the school.

The agency also offers zero-coupon municipal bonds designated as college savings bonds.

While prepaid tuition units are exempted only from state taxes, there are no federal, state or local taxes due on the bonds' earnings at maturity.

"There are a wide range of income groups and demographics in the program, from doctors and lawyers to struggling single moms," Maureen O'Brien, OTTA marketing manager, said. "It seems to be attracting a lot of middle-income families who do not qualify for grant money and can't pay for tuition out of their current income."

The Eskers have enrolled one of their three children, 7-year-old Emily, in the tuition program.

They chose different investment methods for the other two: common stock for 4-year-old Madeline and a $5,000 college savings bond for Christopher, 1.

They may enroll Madeline in the tuition program later this year.

"I'm still very pleased with it overall," Esker, an assistant Summit County prosecutor, said. "I think it's a fine system and a good goal."

David Sweet of Columbus, another participant, likes the plan's hands-off regulations. The state prohibits early withdrawal of tuition funds.

"We look at it as buying tuition now and having it inflation-proofed for 15 years," Sweet said. "It was a way for us to put money away systematically and painlessly."

He and his wife, Cindy, invest about $40 per month for each of their two children, Paul, 5, and Sarah, 18 months. Both children were enrolled at birth.

The OTTA's literature touts the tuition program as "The Smart Start for College." But some financial planners say it's not the smartest start.

Peggy Ruhlin, a certified financial planner in Columbus, said parents can get a greater return on their investment.

The average stock-based mutual fund has earned 10.2 percent interest per year for the last 69 years, she said.

At that rate, the $3,750 it now costs for a year's worth of tuition credits in Ohio would grow to $21,543 in 18 years.

Under the tuition program, that $3,750 would earn only 6 percent interest a year — the most state universities in Ohio can raise tuition. That investment would grow to $10,704 in 18 years.

Michael A. Olivas, a University of Houston law professor who has studied tuition programs, calls them a trustworthy investment.

But he warned that some lagging programs have required an infusion of state funds; others could become so successful that lawmakers noting the increase in private funds may decide to give public universities less money.

"It is almost mean-spirited to be against them," he said, "because they accomplish so many good aims."

Dole wants English as official U.S. language

OTTUMWA— Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, seeking to regain momentum for the state's precinct caucuses, on Monday vowed to rein in welfare for illegal aliens, make English the nation's official language and get rid of the IRS as we know it.

"I'm a conservative, a hard-fighting consistent conservative," Dole said in a speech to about 250 supporters.

He also emphasized his anti-abortion stance, saying "It's all about standing up for the rights of the unborn."

In addition, Dole said he would push to halt pay for President Clinton and members of Congress should a budget deadlock lead to a shutdown of the federal government.

"If you are not going to get paid, why should anyone else get paid?" Dole said.

The Kansas Republican has been generally considered the prohibitive favorite for the state's leadoff precinct caucuses next February, but he was rocked last month when Texas Sen. Phil Gramm tied him in a Republican party-sponsored straw poll.

In his first campaign visit since that straw poll, Dole rejected suggestions he's trimming his message to meet the demands of a more conservative GOP.

"I get tired of reading these stories that Bob Dole is moving to the right," Dole said. "Nobody has checked the voting record. They are all things I've talked about in the past."

But Dole's message was seen as sharper by many key Republicans, including Iowa Republican Chairman Brian Kennedy, who said Dole had a certain level of energy that maybe wasn't there prior to the straw poll.

"He's talking very specifically," Kennedy said. "He hit the issues that are very much of concern to Iowa Republicans."

Dole's speech was aimed at deflating suggestions that his message recently has been vague and that his status as the unquestioned frontrunner was in doubt.

"We're still 30 points ahead of everybody," Dole said. "We're doing all right."

During his speech, Dole drew his loudest ovation with a vow to cut back welfare for illegal immigrants and to make English the official language.

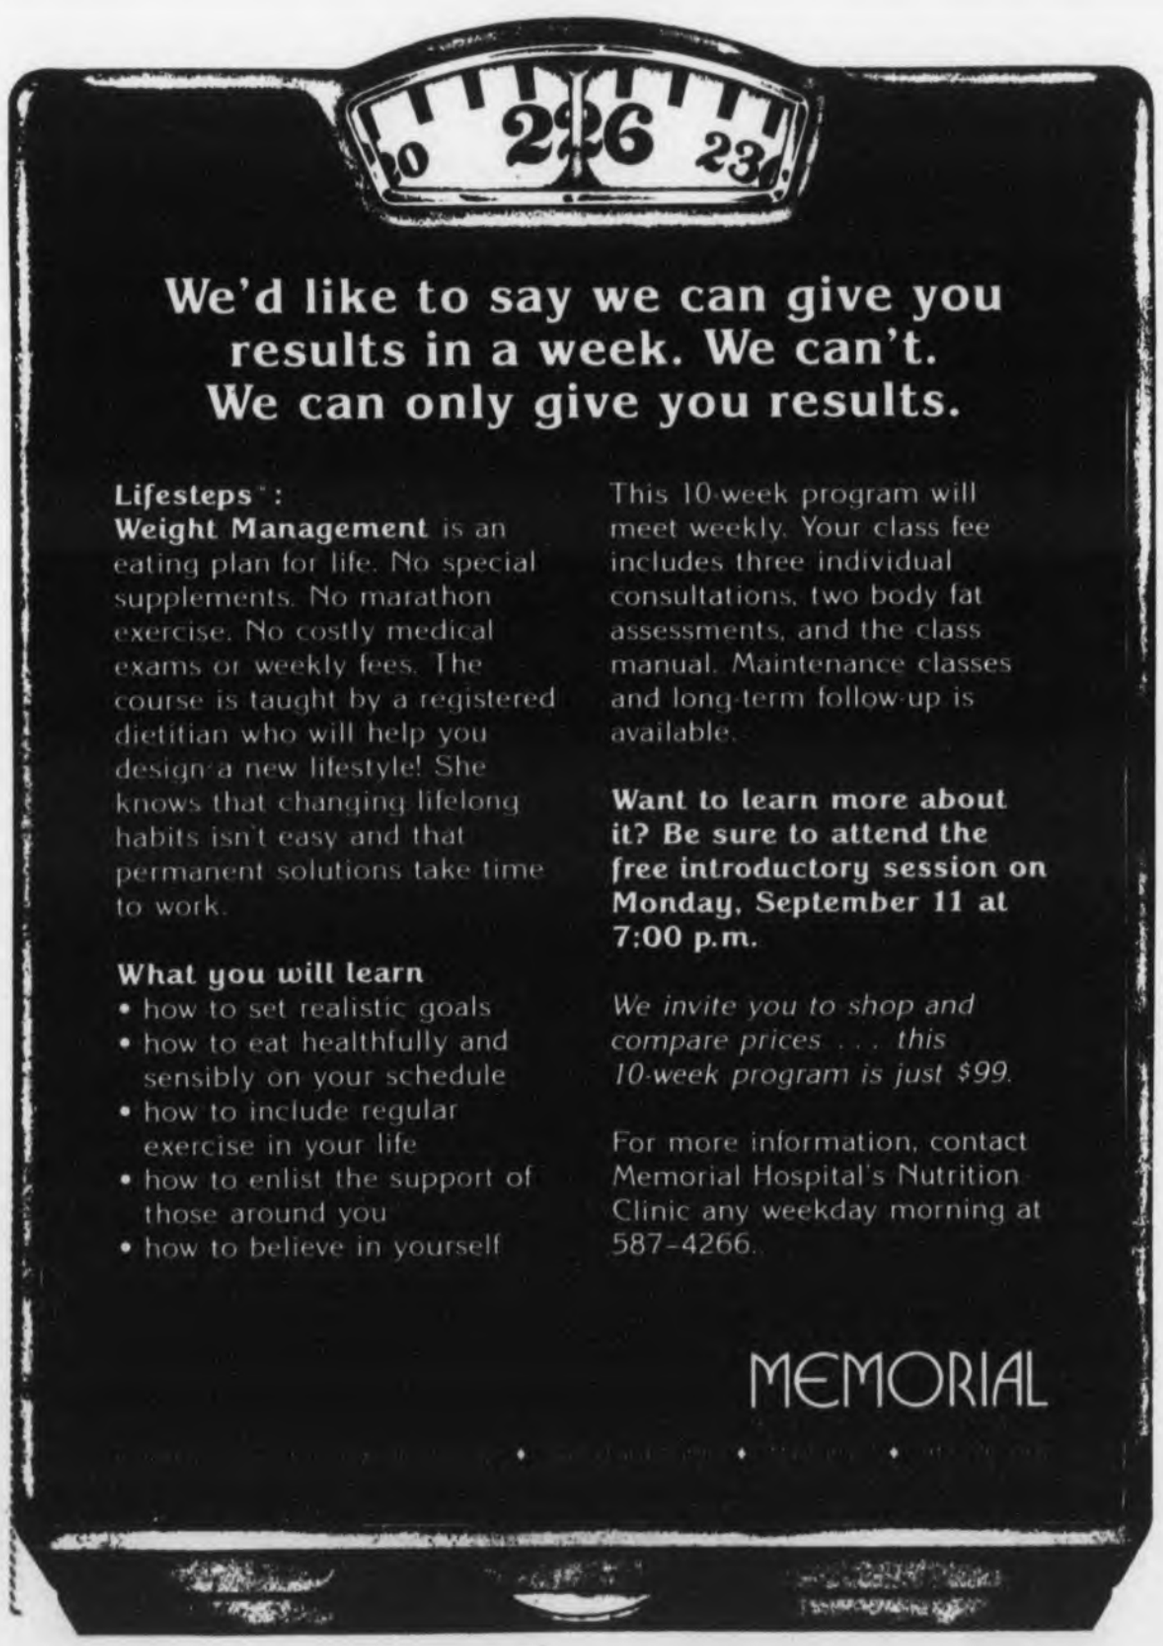
"If you can learn English, your self-esteem is going to be a whole lot better," he said.

He also previewed a tax-cut plan that he will offer today during a speech in Chicago.

"We're going to have a flatter, fairer, simpler tax code," Dole said. "Get rid of the IRS as we know it."

But at the same time Dole warned against proposals to simply institute a flat tax with the same rate for all. That could lead to a shift of the tax burden to middle-income Americans, he warned.

"Take a hard look at these things that sound so good," Dole said. "It's time we get rid of the present tax code."



Dole spoke at in Ottumwa and then at a rally in Burlington.

Unbidden

by Samm Erickson,
junior in parks/resource management

You come unbidden, denying me peace
And solitude within my own mind.
Unbidden yet not unwanted
You flash through my consciousness
Like a kite in spring gales.
I cannot catch you. I cannot hold you.
Just a twinkle of your brilliance
Fans a flickering flame of hope within.

I contemplate double derivatives
And you prance into my mind.
I peruse stoiciometry problems,
You gently nudge in your vaporous shape.
I memorize, theorize, and dramatize.
But you steal my lucid introspections,
Rerouting them to your destination.

Your elusive shape dances daintily
Teasing my dream-fingers
I know you will never be mine,
But knowledge of failure is no deterrent.
I can only hope for that twinkle,
A glimpse of the might-be
That will fan a flickering flame.

K-TAG delayed

Associated Press

WICHITA — The Kansas Turnpike's electronic toll-collecting system has been delayed two months.

Drivers wanting to use the K-TAG system, scheduled to begin this month, will have to wait until November before they can drive nonstop through toll booths as their tolls are automatically charged against their accounts.

Turnpike spokeswoman Lisa Callahan said the $6.7-million collection system is taking longer to install and test than originally planned.

"One of the challenges for the system is we are retrofitting these 40-year-old plazas with this brand-new equipment," Callahan said.

Systems like K-TAG already are being used in other states, but Kansas turnpike officials are the first to install it themselves.

The new system won't replace the current payment method where motorists get a card when they enter the tollroad and pay their accumulated bill when they leave the system. Those booths will remain.

"We will always have out-of-state and tourist customers. We'll always have toll collections," Callahan said.

K-TAG is meant to be an added service for regular users of the road.

The system works like this: A motorist will have a small box — about the size of a cigarette pack — on the inside of the windshield. When the driver slows to 20 mph while passing under the booth overhang, a radio beacon will pick up an account code from the customer's box.

The K-TAG system will identify the driver and the number of axles on the vehicle and deduct the proper toll from the motorist's account. As all that happens, a gate will open on the roadway allowing the slow-moving driver to speed up and continue on.

The system will be sophisticated enough that a driver can use the box with different vehicles, and the K-TAG computer still will be able to bill the right toll, Callahan said.

K-TAG customers will get a 10-percent discount on tolls and must pay a $1 monthly administrative fee. Each new customer deposits $40 in a K-TAG account, and the money is deducted as the driver uses the roadway.

If the account drops to zero, the driver won't receive a discount until the account is refilled.

Some plazas will have a dedicated lane just for K-TAG users, and some will have lanes where K-TAG customer will use the same lanes as people stopping to pay tolls to attendants.

Turnpike officials hope the 14,000 drivers who now have credit accounts they use when paying tolls to attendants will switch to the new system.

"That is what we hope is our base," Callahan said.

So far, about 1,000 people have applied for K-TAG. A mass mailing is being sent this month to those 14,000 credit customers.

Tollroad officials contend the turnpike, which is used by more than 24 million cars and trucks every year, needs the new collection system because its volume of traffic is growing every year. Between 1989 and early 1995, the number of cars and trucks increased 30 percent.

Convent needs new people

■ One sister worries about the future of the convent

Associated Press

CONCORDIA — At its peak in the 1950s, the convent of the Sisters of St. Joseph in Concordia had more than 600 members who taught school, cared for the sick and helped the community in many ways.

Forty-some years later, their numbers have fallen to 250, with only 12 younger than 50.

After maintaining the Nazareth Convent since at least the late 1890s, the sisters are hoping more young women will choose life in the Roman Catholic religious order — but they're leaving the future to God.

"I'm not worried about the community growing older," said Sister Evangelista Kehoe, who is among the Concordia community's senior members. "I always feel if God wants sisters to do work, he'll provide."

Sister Casimir Eilert said she's not worried.

"We're very stable," she said.

Still, she waxed a bit wistful when pondering the lack of young women entering the order in recent years.

"They don't realize what a beautiful life we have, or they'd flock in," she said.

The convent has gone through tough times before. The first nun buried in the cemetery died in 1895 at age 30. Many from those early years died young, including several claimed by a 1920s flu epidemic.

"If somebody had been interviewing them, they probably would have asked the same questions: 'Are you worried about the future?'" said Sister Bette Moslander, who became a nun in 1957.

"We live out of faith that God provides whatever is necessary for the well-being of the church," Moslander, the convent communications director, said.

The dwindling number of sisters was a factor in the recent closing of Marymount College in Salina and played a part in the pending merger of St. John's Regional Health Center with Methodist-affiliated Asbury-Salina Regional Medical Center.

The nuns had provided low-cost labor to Marymount and St. John's, Moslander said. As the sisters retired, they were replaced by full-salaried, lay employees.

The sisters no longer wear their distinctive black-and-white habits, which were not required after the Second Vatican Council in 1962.

Moslander said most sisters viewed the change as positive, but it also has resulted in less visibility in the community. After Vatican II, many nuns also left religious life, she said.

One of the younger sisters, Barbara Ellen Apaceller, 49, of Salina, admits to worrying about the future of the convent, where she hopes to someday retire.

The so-called Motherhouse depends on the younger women to earn money for its operations, but only one or two women join the congregation each year, Apaceller said.

Started in France by a Jesuit priest in 1650, the Sisters of St. Joseph came to the United States in 1836.

In 1883, a group of sisters came to Concordia and established their original home, which is now called the Manna House. After the sisters moved to the Motherhouse in 1903, the original convent became a hospital and infirmary for the aged. Now, as the Manna House, it serves as a house of prayer where retreats, workshops and other activities are conducted. Eight sisters live there.

The sisters came to the frontier to teach the children of the parish and started the St. Joseph's Academy, a residential high school for girls.

Girls came from as far as Illinois and New York to attend the school, Moslander said. When the sisters moved to the Motherhouse, the academy also moved there.

In 1922, when Marymount College opened, the sisters transferred the academy to Marymount, where it operated until 1942.

Today, about 70 nuns live in the convent. The rest live in apartments elsewhere in the area. The order derives its income from sisters working throughout the United States. Their pay is pooled and goes toward the well-being of the community and its missions.

Apaceller, who lives alone in a Salina apartment, is youth director and education director for the Salina diocese. She sends her paycheck back to the convent, which pays her expenses.

She believes smaller families, the tarnished image of religious life, more lay ministers and a social trend away from permanent commitments have combined to cause the decline in religious vocations.

Those who enter the Concordia congregation today tend to be in their late 20s, 30s and 40s. They are educated and have worked professionally before they join.

Thirty and 40 years ago, women entered right out of high school, Moslander said.

In decades past, 15 to 20 women lived in groups and worked together in ministry. Now they more often live and work alone.

The Concordia sisters recruit new members from colleges through retreats or by seeking out older women interested in ministry.

"If God's work needs large numbers of religious women," Moslander said, "they will be here."

Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?

More and more, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Copyright laws outdated

■ Internet technology presents challenge for existing safeguards

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration Tuesday issued proposals designed to help authors and publishers avoid becoming victims of cyberjackers on the Internet.

A report from a presidential task force, "Intellectual Property and the National Information Infrastructure," said the nation's growing computer communications system won't flourish without safeguards against theft.

"Unless we provide legal protection for intellectual property on computer networks, customers won't be able to reap the benefits of these new technologies," Commerce Secretary Ron Brown said in a statement accompanying the report by the Information Infrastructure Task Force.

President Clinton established the group in 1993 to look at how well copyright law is coping with advances in information technologies.

The report found existing copyright law to be fundamentally adequate and effective but recommended changes to bring it in line with current technology.

"Technology has altered the copyright balance — in some instances in favor of copyright owners, and in others in favor of users," said a summary accompanying the report. "The goal of the recommendations is to clarify existing law and adapt it where the balance has shifted."

Addressing a major concern of intellectual property holders, the report recommends classifying transmissions as copies and thus expressly including them under copyright law.

It also suggests an exemption for libraries and archives, allowing them to prepare a limited number of copies for purposes of preservation.

"Without enforceable laws in place, intellectual property owners will be unwilling to put their works at risk in this rapidly expanding digital environment," said Bruce Lehman, the commissioner of patents and trademarks who led the group that developed the report.

Among other recommendations, the report:

■ Calls for prohibiting the manufacture or distribution of any device that would circumvent electronic tags that may be used to protect copyrights in cyberspace.

■ Says the use of a copyright notice should not be mandatory on any published work.

■ Supports legislation that would make it unlawful to infringe a copyright by distributing copies worth more than $5,000.

"Setting a monetary threshold and requiring willfulness ... ensures that merely casual or careless conduct resulting in distribution of only a few copies will not be subject to criminal prosecution," the report said.

The working group that developed the recommendations also supported rules being developed that would allow two parties to establish binding contracts on-line, and the development of encryption technology that could be exported without compromising U.S. intelligence gathering and law enforcement.

Free-speech groups are battling the Clinton administration about a proposal that would give U.S. officials a key to unlock encryption programs produced in the United States for surveillance purposes.

▶ WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Clinton arrives at conference

BEIJING — After sharp criticism about her participation, Hillary Rodham Clinton arrived Tuesday for a global conference to make the case that treating women as second-class citizens undercuts economic and social progress around the world.

"If we join together as a global community, we can lift up the health and dignity of all women," the first lady said during brief comments to a panel on women's health and security.

Clinton told the panel that in too many areas of the world the status of women's health is a picture of human suffering and pain. She was to formally address the United Nations conference later in the day.

"It is important that America play a leadership role at this conference," the first lady said in a speech at a refueling stop in Guam.

"Issues of concern to women are crucial not only to the economic and social progress of our nation, but of every other nation," Clinton said.

Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the U. N., said the United States will make clear where it stands on human rights, even though Clinton is not expected to single out China for its abuses.

"I don't think anybody's going to be in doubt" about the U.S. position, Albright told reporters on Clinton's plane.

changed was the audience."

Ferguson and the Big Bop Nouveau Band will release their new album, a fusion of Indian music, swing and be-bop.

The audience cheered wildly as Ferguson's band began to play "Birdland," a tribute to Duke Ellington. Particularly interesting was the large diversity of age groups that the show attracted.

From the gray-haired grandparents sitting in folding lawn chairs to the wobbling toddlers chasing each other across the grassy field with squirt guns, one could say that, at least in this microcosm, the music had united people of different ages, sexes and races.

For Ferguson jazz music has a nostalgic effect, taking him back to his roots to rediscover the fountain of his youth.

"When I looked at the classical symphony, and then at jazz, the jazz players seemed to be having more fun," he said. "And that's where your head is at when you're young.

"That's the direction I went."

HAIRSTON

"There's no doubt in my mind we're cousins," Darrell Hairston said. "We may be 17th cousins, or we may be 25th, but it's there somewhere."

It is not uncommon, especially in smaller Southern towns, for blacks and whites to share a name and an unspoken history.

But it is rare for either blacks or whites to put that relationship under a microscope, said Ervin Jordan, a historian at the University of Virginia and author of a book on blacks in Civil War-era Virginia.

"These incidents always raise an interesting question, which is why there aren't more cases like this," said Jordan, who is black. "There is denial on both sides. Many African-Americans really are not interested in tracing their lineage back to particular slaves or a particular plantation. Slavery is still a very painful subject."

Though Darrell and Will Hairston have not ignored the pain of their ancestral past, they have put it aside. When the black Hairstons have another reunion, the two men plan to attend together.

"It may seem unusual to some people, but I know I would be welcome," Will Hairston said. "We have a lot stronger family ties than a lot of families do, white or black. When we look at where we came from, we're both digging in the same place."

Student respected for human relations

Claudette Riley
staff writer

To remember a life spent in pursuit of higher education, a memorial service will be held at 2 p.m. today at Danforth Chapel.

Minnie Belle Dawkins, doctoral candidate in education, died of respiratory distress at 11 a.m. Sunday at Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka.

Born in 1921 in Hughes, Ark., Dawkins had a master's degree in supervision and administration from Tuskegee Institute in Alabama and a master's degree in elementary education from the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville.

She also studied special education at the University of Arkansas.

Prior to enrolling at K-State, Dawkins was associate professor and head of the department of education at Philander Smith College.

James Boyer, professor in foundation and adult education, met Dawkins in 1983 and served as her faculty adviser.

"She has been enrolled on and off since 1983, when, at age 60, she chose to attend K-State, and was at the point of writing her dissertation, which looked at programs in aging," Boyer said. "Miss Dawkins was concerned particularly with the aging process of black Americans."

In recent years, Dawkins made numerous trips to attend conferences on aging.

"I think she wanted to devote her life to the rapidly growing population of aging Americans that she saw herself, at some point, joining," Boyer said. "As a person, she was a delight."

Dawkins became highly reflective of her experiences overcoming racial segregation and discrimination in the south, Boyer said.

"She was from that era in the South when she was expected to sit in the back of the bus and couldn't eat at the same lunch counter," Boyer said. "She was essentially persistent, though, and understood that if a person said 'no' the first time, she shouldn't just accept it and stay away."

Boyer said he believes Dawkins' character in dealing with others helped promote her level of achievement.

"She would often say to me that she may not know all the theories, but she knew people. She often suggested to young people that it was most important to know human-relation skills," Boyer said. "She also had a tremendous commitment to social justice and academic equity."

Dawkins, a member of the First United Methodist church, remained single and had no children. Her older brother and sister will share memories of her during the memorial service. The Rev. Clarence Dawkins and Cleodia O'Quinn, Ph.D., who actively trains children in the arts, are from Chicago.

Dawkins was nominated for a Freedom Foundation Award, in Fort Valley, Pa., from 1949-1956. She was also a member of the Women's Society of Christian Service, League of Women Voters and the International Platform Association.

Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, believes students can learn from Dawkins' love of education, both as a student and a teacher.

"She is a lady who really made education important and set an excellent example for others to follow," Fallon said. "She is a model person of black heritage, a model of great achievement."

CNS accounts increase; user classes offered

Karrin Thomas
staff writer

Pay fees, get books, go through drop/add.

Add to these getting an account on K-State's computer system.

This year, many students found getting set up to use the UNIX system, the environment that campus computing is based in, was an essential part of the back-to-school process because more classes are requiring students to enter the information age through e-mail, listservers or research on the Internet.

"There are an awful lot of classes requiring students to send in assignments over e-mail," said Ralph Wasmer, consulting manager at Computing and Network Services.

John Parmley, associate professor of secondary education, is requiring students in his classes to get and use e-mail addresses.

"E-mail provides students an opportunity to discuss things with us electronically without having to chase us down, "he said. "I think it's a very valuable addition to the instruction."

Wasmer said he has seen an increase in the number of students signing up for accounts this year. About 900 new accounts were opened in the first two weeks of school last year. This year, Wasmer estimated CNS signed up about 3,200 students by the end of the second week.

However, many students don't understand how to use the technology.

Tina Deason, junior in speech pathology, was getting her first account on the system because one of her classes requires students to participate in a listserv and use e-mail.

"I'm a little nervous because this is the first time I've ever had to do this," she said.

Wasmer said he suggests the first thing students should do is purchase a K-State Computing Survival Kit. They can be purchased at the K-State Student Union Bookstore for $3.95 or at Varney's Book Store for $4.

"One of the biggest problems we see is the impact of the lack of knowledge of the incoming student," he said.

There are also free classes offered by CNS. Classes cover UNIX computing, including e-mail, Microsoft Windows applications, general software and library resources like the on-line library catalog and other databases that are useful for research.

Computing assistance and schedules of classes are available in the CNS office in Fairchild 9A.

K-State work spacebound

Heather Stephany
staff reporter

Eight K-State experiments will be aboard the Space Shuttle Endeavour scheduled for takeoff Thursday morning from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

"There are probably six or seven students involved with the projects on this particular mission. Some have been working on them for a year, and some for a couple years," said Richard Gerren, BioServe project engineer at K-State.

Post-doctoral students, undergraduate students and 10 to 20 faculty members from the K-State Division of Biology have worked with the experiments, he said.

Many of the projects on the mission focus on the effect gravity has on various functions of life, Gerren said.

Emmanuel Hilaire, graduate student in plant physiology, has worked with K-State's NASA program for four years.

"To me, I look at it as pioneering work. I believe that space is in the future, and it is something that people can look forward at and not a waste of money," he said.

Hilaire's seventh experiment to go to space will be on board Thursday's shuttle.

The experiment uses Arabidopsis' seedlings that are two to three days old and will grow on the space shuttle.

"At a specific time that I choose during the mission, the astronaut will fix the seedlings. Fix is a solution that kills them but retains the cell structure. Once the shuttle is back, I will analyze the cell structure for the seedling by a technology called electron microscopy," Hilaire said.

Experiments on each flight into space will also take place during the same time period on the ground, he said.

When the space shuttle returns, Hilaire will compare the ground and space versions of his experiment.

"It is important to see if space affects the growth of plants and photosynthesis. We can see if production is affected or not by this environment. There are more lipids and less starch in plants while in space, which is something to consider if plants are to be used as food in space sometime," he said.

The amount of ethylene produced by the plant seedlings will also be measured during the experiment because it affects the growth of the plant and its cell structure, Hilaire said.

"For me, it is a thrill to see the shuttle on TV and think that my experiment is floating up there," he said.

"It is very gratifying. We fly two to three times per year for sure, and most scientists don't have that much opportunity."

The NASA Special Center of Research Training in gravitational biology was established at K-State in 1991.

"There is only one NSCORT in gravitational biology in the world, and it is here at K-State in the Division of Biology. About $1 million a year is spent on ground research here," said Jim Guikema, associate director of the Division of Biology.

K-State's program works with the BioServe Space Technologies program headquartered in Boulder, Colo., and another Center for the Commercial Development of Space program in Huntsville, Ala.

Half the work for the BioServe program in Colorado is conducted at K-State.

Because of the ties with those programs, K-State has been able to send a large number of experiments up with the space shuttle, Guikema said.

Many physiological changes occur in space, and NASA has a number of scientists working on how gravity affects life, Guikema said.

While the astronauts are in space, their immune systems do not work as well, and they lose bone and muscle mass.

If America is going to be a space-faring nation, it is important to understand how the lack of gravity affects life, he said.

With the possibility of future space stations or extended missions in space, development is important.

Studying bone and cell development in the absence of gravity is necessary to ensure people will be able to develop normally in space, Gerren said.

Guikema said there are two ways one can approach possible space settlements.

"We could pack up and take everything they will need like the wagon trains, or we can send up a starting kit for them containing things like plants which can conduct photosynthesis and provide oxygen," he said.

Thursday launch threatened

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Worried that Hurricane Luis could head this way, NASA prepared Space Shuttle Endeavour for a possible retreat from the launch pad that could cause another delay in the mission.

With the countdown clock ticking toward a Thursday liftoff, the space agency will decide today whether to move the shuttle to the hangar for protection against Luis' damaging wind. That could delay the flight as much as a week.

Even if the powerful hurricane avoids Florida's east coast, the chances of acceptable weather for the 11:09 a.m. launch were put at only 40 percent.

Endeavour had to be moved off its pad in early August for protection against the much weaker Hurricane Erin.

The mission to release a pair of science satellites already is more than a month late because of repairs to O-ring joints on the solid rocket boosters and because of an overheated power generator that forced NASA to scrub a launch attempt hours before liftoff last week.

Rough seas from Hurricane Luis could also delay the flight.

It's uncertain whether NASA would launch Endeavour if the shuttle's two solid rocket boosters could not be retrieved promptly from the Atlantic, shuttle test director Bill Dowdell said. Engineers want Endeavour's boosters back as soon as possible to analyze the repairs.

The boosters peel away from the shuttle two minutes into flight and drop into the ocean.

A leak in a booster joint caused Space Shuttle Challenger to explode in 1986, killing all seven astronauts.

FRANCE CONDUCTS UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR TESTING DESPITE PROTESTS

PAPEETE, Tahiti (AP) — Defying international protests, France set off an underground nuclear blast Tuesday on a remote atoll in the South Pacific, beginning a series that officials in the French government said will include up to eight nuclear tests.

The blast took place at 12:30 a.m. (4:30 p.m. CDT) in a tunnel beneath Mururoa Atoll, military spokesperson Col. Abel Moittier announced in Tahiti, capital of the French territory in the South Pacific.

The blast ended a three-year French moratorium on nuclear testing, which had been joined by all of the world's nuclear powers except China.

China, which never joined the moratorium, conducted its fourth underground nuclear test in 14 months on Aug. 17.

Public outrage erupted when French President Jacques Chirac announced the planned tests in June. Chirac said they were necessary so that France could create computer simulations that would make further tests unnecessary.

The blast Tuesday released energy equal to less than 20,000 tons of TNT, the French Defense Ministry announced in Paris.

By comparison, the atomic bomb that destroyed Hiroshima was equal to about 15,000 tons of TNT.

PELL GRANT CREATOR DECLINES ELECTION BID FOR 7TH TERM IN CONGRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Sen. Claiborne Pell, the quirky blueblood and longtime liberal who created the college-grant program bearing his name, said Tuesday he will not seek a seventh term.

The 76-year-old Democrat, who helped draft the U.N. charter in 1945 and create the National Endowment for the Arts, was diagnosed last year with Parkinson's disease. The disease has left him with an increased stoop and a weakened voice. It has also caused Pell to drool occasionally.

"I have been assured that there is no medical barrier to my seeking re-election and to serving another six-year term," Pell said.

"However, I have decided not to be a candidate for re-election. There is a natural time for all life's adventures to come to an end, and this period of 36 years would seem to me about the right time for my service in the Senate to end."

Despite his shortcomings — in a 1990 televised debate, Pell said his memory was not as good as it should be — many political observers said they believe he could win if he sought another term.

Pell wrote the 1965 legislation creating a program that has dispensed grants to 54 million poor and middle-class college students. In 1980, Congress named the payments Pell Grants in his honor.

He vigorous opposed the Vietnam War, and sponsored a treaty banning nuclear weapons on the ocean floors. Pell became chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in 1987, only to lose the post to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

NEW ENGLAND CROPS SUFFER

BOSTON (AP) — The leaves are falling from the trees without turning their usual brilliant reds and golds. Pumpkins are already turning orange — or withering on the vine.

One of the worst droughts the Northeast has ever seen is worrying farmers and firefighters from Maine to New Jersey and leading to water restrictions.

"Every day it doesn't rain, we lose a pile of money. And looking at the weather reports, it may not rain for another week," said Scott Ellis, who has 750 acres of soybeans in New Jersey.

The dry July and August are threatening the eye-popping foliage changes and roadside farm stands that draw thousands of leaf peepers and other tourists to New England.

"They're ripening very early," pumpkin farmer Peter Gibney of Danvers, Mass., said. "They're showing a lot of color right now that normally they don't."

Farmers in New Jersey said the pumpkins were too small to sell.

Rainfall throughout the Northeast is 8 to 16 inches below average this year.

In some areas, the drought is setting records. Belfast, Maine, didn't have a drop of rain for 31 days.

FRAUD INDICTMENT THROWN OUT

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A federal judge threw out a fraud indictment Tuesday against Gov. Jim Guy Tucker, ruling that the Whitewater prosecutor exceeded his authority in bringing the charges. Tucker still faces a more serious set of charges brought by the prosecutor.

Tucker, a Democrat, had been accused of obtaining a federally backed loan under false pretenses and trying to avoid taxes on the sale of a cable television business. The loan was used by the cable business.

U.S. District Judge Henry Woods said the charges bore no resemblance to the matters Whitewater special prosecutor Kenneth Starr was assigned to investigate.

Starr, appointed by a panel of federal appeals judges for the District of Columbia, had contended that Woods had no authority to restrict the scope of his investigation, and Attorney General Janet Reno had agreed.

But the judge ruled otherwise.

"I cannot accept the proposition that a citizen can be put on trial in my court for a loss of his liberty, and that no court has the power to determine whether there is jurisdiction to proceed in the matter," the judge said.

▶ COMMISSION MEETING

City residents want answers

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

Questions about general city expenditures in previous years have some Manhattan residents puzzled.

Residents told city commissioners Tuesday night the city needs to hire an auditor to answer some long-sought-after questions.

Delesa Rhodeman, Manhattan resident, said she has been trying for 10 years to get answers from the city about why there is no money in the city's Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund and the 1983 Community Development Block Grant.

In 1983, the city received a $185,000 grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a water-main improvement and administration. The grant was later amended to include $169,016 generated from the program's land sales, rentals and rehabilitation loan payments, according to documents prepared by Curt Wood, the city's director of finance.

According to the document, the grant was closed in 1986.

Rhodeman, who lives in south Manhattan, said it is unfortunate that south Manhattan has not received any money for community development because previous commissioners said there was not any money in the fund.

"I'm not going to be satisfied until myself and some other people here have an independent auditor," she said. "I know that one plus one does not equal three."

Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, also a south Manhattan resident, said she thinks the city needs an auditor to let taxpayers know where their taxes are going.

She said she went to the Manhattan Public Library to look at the monthly expenses and found about $180 was spent on office candy and $300 was spent on coffee. Other taxpayer money was spent on floral arrangements for city secretaries on Secretary's Day.

"I really think it's time we start looking at things," Bloomberg-Ellis said. "It seems like every other day departments are going to Wal-Mart for supplies."

She said she honestly doesn't think anyone wants to catch the city doing anything unlawful, but evaluation of the expenditures needs to be done.

Ruby Jones, south Manhattan resident, said she is upset that a park , which was supposed to be constructed in south Manhattan, was never built.

"Why does this neighborhood always have to be the one to get less of the pie?" she said. "This park has been in the making for some time."

Jones said revenue from land that was sold was supposed to go into the park fund.

"I'd like to know just where the money went for

Alcohol banned at games, in stadium

■ K-State police enforce alcohol laws at football games.

Sarah Lunday
campus editor

Wildcat fans got a sobering slap in the fangs from the K-State Police Saturday.

"You can tailgate. You just have to drink Coke or Pepsi," Jim Lehne, campus police sergeant, said.

The police handed out notices to cars at the KSU Stadium gates to educate fans about the alcohol law, which affects areas inside and outside of the stadium, he said.

"Every car that came in the parking lot got a flyer that stated drinking alcohol is illegal on state property," Lehne said.

Reducing the amount of alcohol consumed at the stadium is a joint effort between the campus police and K-State athletic department, Athletic Director Max Urick said.

"In my judgment, people have just not been aware of the law," he said.

Tickets were not issued at Saturday's game, but K-State police will enforce the law, Lehne said.

The campus police also plan to hand out notices at the Akron game, he said.

"The first two games are educational, but this doesn't preclude us from writing tickets," he said.

The decision to crack down on the consumption of alcohol on state property is because it is illegal and because of the crowds, Lehne said.

"There's a lot of people at a very close proximity," he said.

With the crowds increasing the athletic department doesn't want anything to happen at the games that could get out of control, Urick said.

Students and alumni will not be treated differently, he said.

"I don't think it's going to impact one group more than any other," he said.

But some students said fans should be able to drink if that is their decision.

"I think whatever they want to do — that's great," Donnie Hickman, freshman in pre-medicine and music, said.

D. J. O'Neal, freshman in elementary education, said, "As far as in the parking lot, if people are going to pay $20 for a ticket they should be able to drink in the parking lot."

Alcohol is allowed at the privately leased skyboxes inside the stadium, Urick said.

Outside the stadium, alcohol is permitted at fund raising events that are registered with the athletic department, Urick said.

Registered events are usually on the grass near the baseball field or the football offices, Lehne said.

At-large members needed for Student Senate

The purpose of having at-large positions on these committees is to bring in outside ideas, experiences and opinions.

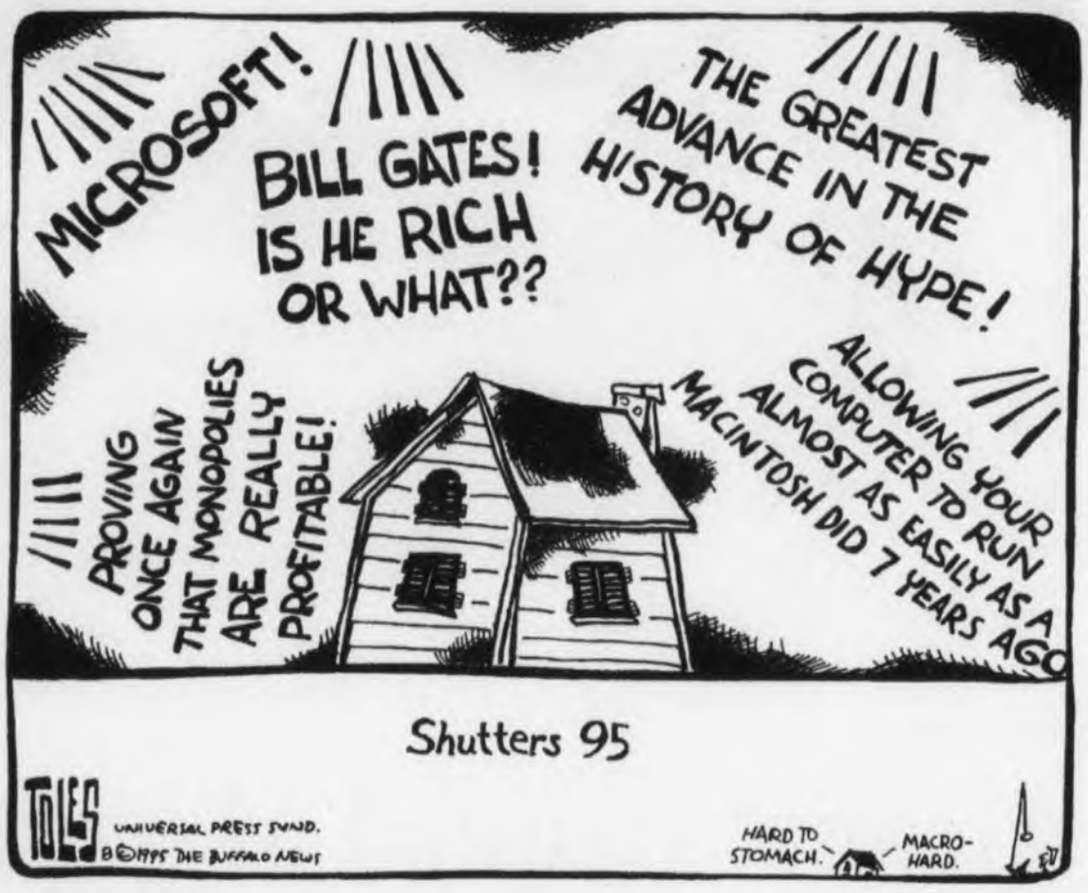
Just as a complex piece of machinery needs all its parts in place and running to work, so do Student Senate standing committees need student at-large members to run efficiently and effectively.

Four Senate standing committees are in need of at-large members to bring their memberships up to the numbers specified in legislation in order to do business. The other standing committees have open membership counts and are in search of interested students as well.



The purpose of having at-large positions on these committees is to bring in outside ideas, experiences and opinions. It is a way to open up student government for broader student involvement at the level where most of the work is done.

There are eight standing committees: Academic Affairs and University Relations, State and Community Affairs, Student Affairs and Social Services, Parking and Campus Safety, Communications, Senate Operations, Privilege Fee and Allocations. The Elections committee is also a Student Senate committee that is open to at-large members.

It is a simple application and interview process. Pick up, fill out and return an application in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union. A description of each committee is on the back of the application. Applications should be turned in by the end of the week.

Important issues such as optional fees, plus-minus grading, privilege fee reviews and more are coming up during this legislative session. Getting involved is the best way have your voice heard on important issues.

POLITICIANS LACK INTEGRITY

Another round of politics will soon be swinging around in society, preempting America's favorite sitcoms and filling nightly newscasts with reports of the smallest victories and defeats.

The November primaries have evolved into a contest dealing with the fickle side of various political trusts; insults to another candidate's character have as much weight as valid points in a debate. It is in these arenas, whose medium exists in every den and living room in America, that we line up to the ideologies handed down to us.

During my freshman year of college, as the Clinton campaign battled the Bush contingency, I remember advocating Clinton as a candidate of change, defending him against conservative friends and even going as far as having one of his campaign buttons adorning my backpack.

I believed in his ideals and found that I could overlook the flaws brought to light about his character by a smear campaign.

When he was elected, I was elated. I also became one of the people disillusioned by his performance as president.

As time went on, as any savvy political readers can attest to, Clinton's presidency proved to be one of inadequacy within the wide vision of the public eye.

COLUMN

JUSTIN WILD

From basic domestic policy to the complexities of the global chessboard, he has been branded by contemporaries as a lame duck.

Logically, in the coming race in '96, eyes have turned to hopeful Republican candidates.

Unfortunately, the starved eyes of the American people are falling on an empty table.

A party's national convention is not the defining moment in the life of a candidate.

Primaries in New Hampshire and other states illustrate the true blood of a candidate. Within the Republican camp, the analysts have picked a showdown between two people: the already-infamous Bob Dole and the lesser-known Phil Gramm of Texas.

Within the confines of this paper, any avid reader has seen the general liberal opinion of Dole as an individual who panders to organizations for their money; he has also set his political tone with denouncing Hollywood, in particular Time Warner Inc., for enslaving the American populace with sex and violence.

Subsequently, he voted for a bill which would, in effect, be more of a boon to Time Warner Inc. than a hindrance.

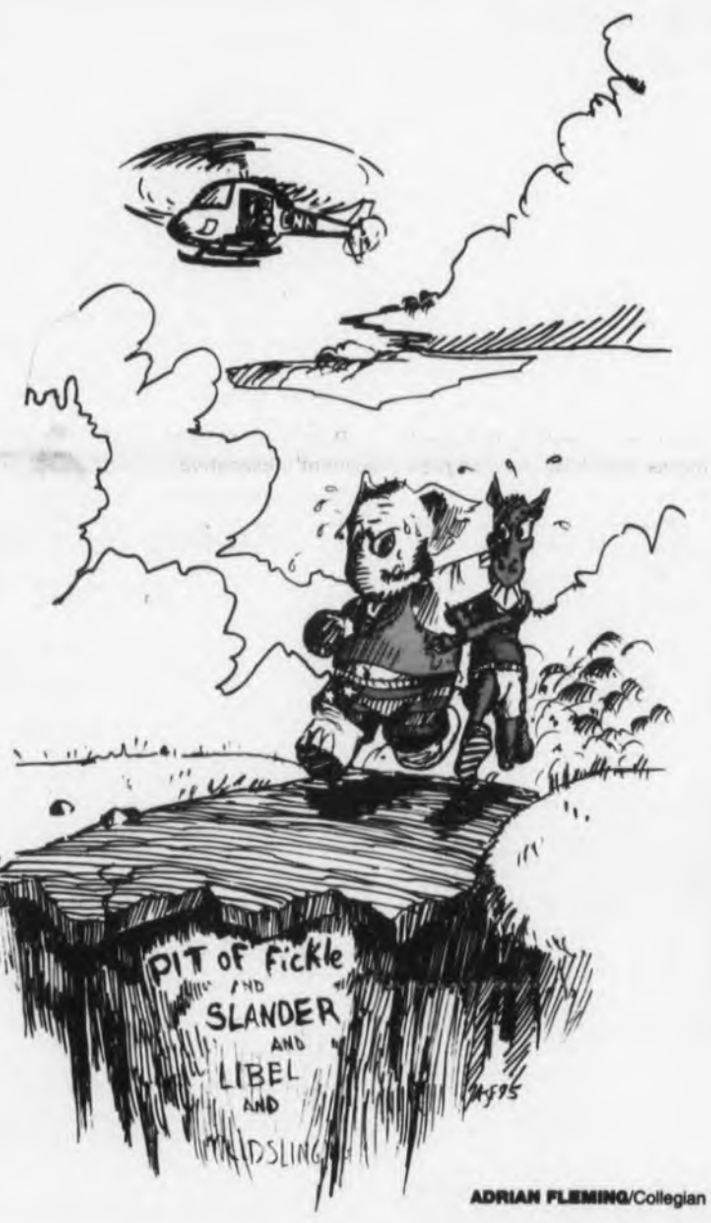
Gramm, viewed as a harder conservative, has been much more quiet; his views aren't as widely known as Dole's, and he hasn't made his mark as an outspoken voice for any one issue in the eyes of American voters.

I'm doubtful this bout in political history will be marked with great moments; rather, it will be more like the song "Mrs. Robinson" by Simon and Garfunkel: "Any way you look at, you lose?"

In the past few elections, the choice for voters hasn't been the stronger, wiser candidate; it has been a choice of the lesser of two evils, or the best of the worst.

The men we watch in November will hardly be Lincoln and Douglas; the diatribes our various contenders deliver will be mixed messages intertwined with the wishes of lobbyists.

The reality we must now face, one which should be prevalent after the coming primaries, is that our politicians reflect our current nation and not the ideals of history books.



JUSTIN WILD

"In the past few elections, the choice for voters hasn't been the stronger, wiser candidate; it has been a choice of the lesser of two evils, or the best of the worst."

When America's educated were an elite class, the politicians were educated men who debated beyond the comprehension of the majority of the population.

Now, they exist as their voters do — in a simplistic expression of interest and emotion.

INDECISION causes stress about major choice

I seem to have reached that point in a college student's life when it all boils down to that one decision, that final choice. You know the one I'm talking about; we're faced with it from the day we step onto a college campus, and it's not the old "bottles or cans" debate.

It's the Great, White choose-your-major-now dilemma. It's the question that lurks like a shark no matter where you go.

The air on campus can be cut with a knife from the tension as juniors and seniors prepare to commit their lives to one certain path. There's a taste of desperation among the spilled beer in Aggieville. I think you get the picture.

"But Kady," you cry, "you've had journalism and mass communications listed as your major since you started writing this column."

That's true, but let me share a dark little secret with you — that's a front to keep my parents and my adviser from harping on me about choosing something. Yeah, and it was working pretty well until now. Such is life.

My dad solved his problem by becoming a state trooper. He loved it. He got his own car, cool uniforms and a gun. He quit that about three years ago and became a youth minister, expertly dodging the suit-and-office routine.

My husband changed his major from electrical engineering to electrical engineering technology (There's a difference, but please don't ask me to explain it.)

He basically decided to chuck it all and start over, thereby giving me a prime example of what not to do.

Yep, this is it, the big one. I know what I don't want to do, and I won't mention it for fear of offending someone in those areas.

But I do know I don't want to sit behind a desk, wear a suit, or ever hear the words "if it's not on my desk by 5:30, you can kiss profit-sharing goodbye" come out of my mouth.

I do know I want to do something in the field of journalism, but I won't bore you with all the different concentrations there.

There are a great many ways to choose a major. Some people have listed all the majors they're considering and thrown darts. Some people never decide and go for a double major. A good portion finally get so desperate, they just pick whatever they have the most credits in.

COLUMN

KADY GUYTON

All of these work sometimes, but I don't want to leave the direction of my life to my dart skills (which are pretty rotten, to say the least).

Actually, I'm starting to get sort of tired of the whole question.

When people ask me where I see myself in five or 10 years, I've started to answer "I don't know, Colorado maybe."

Although this doesn't give a very good impression, at least the subject gets changed.

Is it me, or was it easier when I was 8?

People would ask me what I wanted to be when I grew up, and I would say I wanted to be a U.S. Marine or a writer.

Now, I just look desperate.

I think I have another semester or two before I absolutely, positively have to choose or else. I also plan to milk that time for all it's worth.

Just as an aside, has anyone ever bothered to find out what colleges do if you don't choose?

I mean, do they throw you out or refuse to accept your tuition check? Maybe I'll be among the first to find out.

▶ COLLEGIAN PRAISES

Editor,

It is funny how two people can have two totally different accounts of the same thing.

In Adam Galyon's letter (Readers Write, Sept. 5, 1995) he has "noticed a definite change in the reporting capabilities of the Collegian."

I have noticed a change too, but see it in a much more positive light.

Especially this year, many articles and opinions have been printed to make people think.

Galyon's anger is probably because Galyon and others like him do not understand that media such as the Collegian have a duty to be subjective, not objective.

In the glory days past of newspapers, reporters were supposed to add their insight to an issue in a subjective manner, to ask you, the reader, to think.

Today's media spoon feed the masses of Americans lifeless blather to pacify them.

The massage is: "Don't question anything, just buy lots of stuff from our advertisers."

I applaud the Collegian for having columnists willing to question the status quo, whether it is the policies of K-State or those of the United States.

We are not just consumers; we are thinking intelligent people (some of us anyway), and we appreciate being prodded to think about issues of local and international importance.

By the way, we are just animals. Look around this planet and you will see that we are not the smartest ones either.

Playing the $TOCK MARKET

Students don't have to limit themselves to minimum-wage jobs to get through college

When students make the decision to attend a college, most of them hope to obtain a future job that offers financial stability.

Another way to gain financial success is through investments. For college students on a budget, that most likely means searching for inexpensive ways to invest.

Fred Freeby, senior account executive with Waddell and Reed, has helped students and other people with their financial future by teaching a money management class through UFM.

During his Sept. 12 class, Freeby will explain how to save money on taxes; ways to reduce spending; house, car and life insurance savings plans and other helpful investment tips.

"I talk about everything, like mutual funds and preparing for retirement," Freeby said.

Freeby said he is favorable toward open-market investments. One such investment includes mutual funds. He said he recommends 3- to 5-year investment plans to his clients, while he prefers 5- to-10 year plans.

As for the longer investment plans, most people who know would say the longer the commitment, the better the return will be, Roger Trenary, instructor in economics, said.

"You should be thinking 30 years into the future. Not two or three," Trenary said.

Bob Stamey, account executive with the Investment Center at Kansas State Bank, said he agrees with Trenary's suggestion.

He said short-term investments, a year or less, always have a higher market risk. The market can fluctuate either up or down, taking the investor's money with it.

> "It's kind of a chance. There is no manager that so consistently beats the market year after year after year."
> ROGER TRENARY
> INSTUCTOR OF ECONOMICS

"Be real cautious with these," he said. "Go long-term."

Out of all the mutual funds available, Freeby said choosing the right fund depends on your own personal objectives and goals.

One way to think of mutual funds is as companies that buy and sell their own shares freely. The capital gained is then used to invest in other companies. This unrestricted buying and selling is what keeps funds diversified, rather than permanently affixed in one sole corporation.

Mutual funds are called that because each owner is treated equally. They pool their money together to make investments in several companies, usually about 50 to 400, and they share the returns or losses proportionate to how much each originally invested in the fund.

"It's called diversification," Stamey said. "We invest through a lot of companies so if one goes broke your total investment doesn't suffer."

Stamey said there are two ways to buy mutual funds. An investor can either pay a fee (load), or not pay one (no-load). When investors choose a load plan, they are consulted by the broker on which of the approximate 6,000 companies to invest in.

The broker makes his money by charging about 4 percent with each consultation. However, with a no-load plan, investors are on their own, and they make investments from their account without the advice of the broker and without paying the fee. Any money they make throught they investment is money they keep.

Trenary said taking a broker's advice isn't necessarily the best way to go because even inexperienced investors have the same chance of beating the odds of the market as the brokers do. He said his advice is to avoid paying a broker by going with the no-load route.

"It's kind of a chance," Trenary said. "There is no manager that so consistently beats the market year after year after year."

SMART MONEY

- There are three types of national United Group mutual funds. Those listed under the Money Market and Bond Funds include cash management, government securities and bond, municipal bond, municipal high-income and high-income funds.

Although people can invest through other entities like banks, individual investments and savings and loans, others agree that mutual funds are the best way to go.

> "No other investment has beaten the stock market. Not even close."
> ROGER TRENARY
> INSTRUCTOR OF ECONOMICS

"No other investment has beaten the stock market. Not even close," Trenary said.

Stamey said his company tries to go out and buy the highest-quality, most aggressive and international stocks his investors decide on. He said each investor in his firm knows which kinds of stocks will be bought ahead of time.

Regardless, risk always plays a factor in almost everything you can invest in. But Freeby maintains that risks are one of those things that can reap the biggest reward.

"Historically, it's been the way to go," he said. "But I can't make any guarantees."

Although risk is one element of investing to contend with. But don't be fooled. It's not the only element. Money is something else you have to consider. Most people think they need a lot of it in order to invest, but that isn't always the case.

Depending on where you go and what plan you choose, people can open a mutual fund account for about $50 when including a bank draft direct deposit of $25 a month into your account. Freeby said for people to receive the best return, they should continually add to their account, even if it's minimal. More money means two things, though — more of a return or more of a loss.

"They need to be willing to put every little thing away," Freeby said.

Trenary said people need to force themselves to start putting money away immediately at a consistent rate and not wait until they are 45 or 50 years old.

He said at the market's average rate of 5 percent a year, the money invested could double in 15 years. Trenary said he was very confident with these figures because he said the annual market rate has averaged at about 6 to 7 percent for the last 40 to 50 years — a bright outlook for investors.

"That's how you can become a millionaire when you retire," Trenary said. "Compound interest is so powerful."

Rugby Club members and almni work together to keep club

THRIVING

Shana Newell
contributing writer

Taking advantage of a beautiful, sunny afternoon, the K-State/Fort Riley Rugby Club opened its season Saturday with a fund-raising game, pitting itself against club alumni.

In a series of matches with relaxed rules, the game allowed all members and alumni a chance to play.

"With all the changes internationally, it is refreshing to come back and play good, hard-hitting rugby with the boys at K-State," Curt Thurman, 1994 K-State graduate, said. Thurman is working with Rugby Magazine in Denver.

Alumni could participate with a minimum $50 contribution. Some traveled from as far away as Illinois, Virginia and North Carolina, but there were those who still reside in the Manhattan area.

The club uses membership fees and the money raised from the event to offset the costs of travel during the season, which begins in August and continues until May.

This weekend, the team travels to Norman to meet the University of Oklahoma's rugby club, and Sept. 16 they go head-to-head with the Lincoln City Club in Nebraska.

Participating in the games were the five Robke brothers from Seneca. Steve Robke, a 1992 K-State graduate, is an all-American. He plays in Davenport, Iowa, while attending chiropractic school.

The youngest brother, Ryan, is a sophomore undecided. In addition to Ryan and Steve, brothers Kevin, Gregg and Matt also took part in the event.

About 35 men play for the club, with about 10 from Fort Riley. Anyone interested in joining is encouraged to contact the team at any time. Most new members have never had any experience with rugby, and college is their first opportunity to get involved and learn more about the sport.

"We start during fee payment. We'll usually do a table in the Union about the second or third weeks of school," said Tim Harrold, senior in theatrical arts education and club treasurer. "We teach them everything they need to know."

Although the club has some experienced players, the majority of the members are new to rugby. Win Shortland, graduate student in kinesiology, is from New Zealand and Jerry Gillespie, K-State professor in clinical sciences, is from the birthplace of rugby — England.

Although some players have played high-school football, the frame of mind they need to play rugby is different.

Jimmy Scritchfield, freshman undecided, said rugby has a distinct mentality that differs from football.

"The players are here because they are dedicated to rugby, not for its social aspect. It's a lot of hard work," he said.

Shoulders and knees take the majority of the pain and are the most vulnerable to injury. The membership dues cover the cost of insurance for the players in case of serious injury.

"All my guts rushed up to my head like a blow-up doll," said Johnathan Seal, 1994 K-State graduate, describing a hit taken during the game.

K-State physics professor Chris Sorenson played rugby at the University of Colorado as a graduate student. In the late '70s and early '80s, he participated in the K-State club occasionally while an assistant professor.

Sorenson now serves as the faculty sponsor for the team and speaks highly of its possibilities.

"Year in and year out, the team is very good. They are highly competitive and will do great again this year," he said.

"We're fielding one of the best teams in the last few years," Harrold said.

The club expects to have a good chance to win the regional tournament in Kansas City Oct. 21-22. If it succeeds, the team will compete in nationals, a road that the K-State club has traveled in the past.

"The team went to the final four in 1980 or '81 finishing fourth place," Sorenson said. "They lost two very tough matches in which they played very competitively."

Anyone with an interest in supporting the K-State Rugby Club can when the team returns to play two matches against Springfield on Sept. 22.

Comparing rugby and football

Rugby originated during the 1820s at the Boy's Rugby School in England, hence its name. A young man by the name of William Webb Ellis decided that he was tired of playing soccer in the traditional way and began a past time that is still found worldwide.

Eventually, rugby led to the creation of American football which is comparable in many ways:

- Rugby involves 15 persons on each team facing off against each other.
- The purpose is to move an oval ball, somewhat larger than an ordinary football, down a field and into the try area.
- Like the ball, the rugby field is also larger than a traditional football field at 120 meters long (including the try area) and 60 meters wide.
- The try area at 20 meters long resembles football's endzone.
- Points are scored when the ball touches the ground in the try area, a player makes a drop goal (somewhat like a field goal), or a conversion play is run.
- In rugby, play continues almost without any stops.
- Rugby has the scrum — football does not. The scrum is a pack of eight men from each team locked against each other in a huddle formation. In the middle of this pack is the hooker whose job is to "hook" the ball out from inside the group. The two teams push against each other to allow the hooker to get the ball out. Once the ball is out, play continues.
- Like football, each player has a job to do. Unlike football, everyone can carry the ball.
- The ball can be kicked, thrown, or carried at any point during the game. Passes are thrown backwards, and the ball must be released the instant it touches the ground, allowing anyone to retrieve it.

An overrated KU team, Matt Miller's hair and other Cat ponderings

COLUMN

TODD STEWART

This Cincinnati game scares me.

These Bearcats, who were supposed to be pushovers, pushed Kansas for an entire 60 minutes before losing by five, 23-18, on Saturday.

What should scare the Wildcats more than anything is the Bearcats didn't quit kicking or squirming the entire game.

KU should have beaten the Bearcats by two touchdowns or more, so the Cats could have more of a battle on their hands than they initially expected. To overlook them would be a mistake.

Or maybe this is because KU has been given too much credit and is just that bad — Yea, that's probably closer to the truth. Forget what I said about Cincinnati scaring me, that's my mistake. I thought KU might have a better team than that.

Something that does scare me is the play of quarterback Matt Miller.

Miller still has a long way to go. Coach Bill Snyder was right when he said numbers can be misleading because Miller did not look that great in Saturday's 34-7 season-opening victory over Temple.

Luck, more than anything, was on Miller's side, as time and time again passes were off the mark, and receivers were having to adjust their patterns accordingly. Helping Miller's cause are the three best receivers in the conference.

Also, at least on a few plays, a more aware Temple secondary would make a couple easy interceptions.

Miller's strong supporting cast, however, will help him through the season.

You've got to love this running back situation. A position controversy has never been more exciting. Snyder has said he won't do it, but on occasion, I would love to see Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence in there at the same time. Combine those two with the fabulous wide receiver trio of Kevin Lockett, Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running, and there's no reason Miller is not second-team all-Big 8.

Make that second-team all-Big 8 on the field, first-team all-hair.

Last week I said Miller had the prettiest hair on the team, and perhaps, in the Big 8. I stand by those comments, but one thought kept going through my mind at the press conference after the Temple game — he cut his hair.

Actually, I can't verify if he did cut it or not, but something about his hair looked different. Maybe it's just a different style, or maybe it's me, but it's not how I remember it. I couldn't bring myself to slip in a question about the hair, trying to play the credible journalist and all, but I couldn't stop wondering.

His hair just wasn't quite as pretty as I had remembered; in fact, it looked more like mine.

Miller takes that new hair to Cincinnati on Saturday for the first road game on the season.

At yesterday's press conference, Snyder was asked what one thing scares him most about playing on the road, and he responded with three words.

"Plane going down."

Coach, not everyone is as comedic about flying the not-so-friendly skies. Just ask my loyal stuffed koala bear and best travelling friend, A.J.

By the way, when Temple blocked a Cat punt on Saturday, Snyder did not take it so well, as one might imagine.

"I would rather eat dirt than have that," he said.

I would pay to see that.

Maybe A.J. and I'll get that chance this weekend in Cincinnati.

Montana enjoying new life in football

Associated Press

NEW YORK — It wasn't quite like game nerves, Joe Montana said. Worse, maybe.

Yet, for his debut on "NFL Live" on Sunday, Montana got a passing grade as a TV announcer. He wasn't great, but he wasn't awful, and that's good for NBC.

"The guys were great, all trying to pat me on the back," Montana said in the studio later. "It was fun. I'm still taking it by the seat of the pants."

Montana, the former NFL quarterback and future Hall-of-Famer, took his seat in the studio on Sunday for the first of his six regular-season appearances on NBC. He'll also make five post-season stops.

"We've got a sense that he has good things to say. It was just a matter of, 'Would he perform?' I think he performed pretty well," producer Ricky Diamond said.

He wasn't as footloose as Mike Ditka, not as expressive as Joe Gibbs, not as glib as Greg Gumbel, but outside of a few minor "um-um's" and a tendency to race a little at first, he was pretty much on target.

"In the beginning, I was real nervous about it. It's funny. I actually felt pretty comfortable going in, and all of a sudden when they said '10 seconds to live,' I got real nervous," he said.

"It was a different kind of nerves from game nerves. I don't think they built up on me, but they caught me a couple of times. Like, when I'd stumble, I'd get nervous again."

Know what else made him nervous?

"You'd just get going, and then you'd see how smooth the other guys are. They're so quick and so easy. It made me a little more nervous," he said.

"It's good to work with somebody so good, though."

What Montana lacked in seasoning he made up for in sheer star quality. You know his fans were watching, and there are a lot of those.

That is not to say he can't improve. In fact, he must. Most of his insights were rather common, and you might have gotten the idea he knows more than he's saying.

He did call last year's AFC champions from San Diego overrated as a team and said they didn't belong in the Super Bowl, and he predicted that New York Jets quarterback Boomer Esiason was in for a long year.

So he didn't entirely back away from issues.

And he did flash those MVP teeth, and many of his fans heard him laugh for the first time. They'll give him a break, even if he does stumble a few more times.

"Well," Montana said, "we'll find out."

Notre Dame still reeling from loss to Northwestern

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz learned something from last year's dismal season: Don't make big changes just because things aren't going well.

So don't look for Notre Dame to do things much differently than the they did Saturday, when they lost to Northwestern 17-15 in one of the most shocking upsets in college football history.

"Last year we did that," he said Sunday. "We changed, we grasped, we groped. No way."

Though Notre Dame finished 6-5-1 and out of the rankings last season, the loss to Northwestern was still stunning because of the history of the schools.

Entering the season, Notre Dame had the highest winning percentage in big-time college football (.760), the most national championships (eight) and the most Heisman Trophy winners (seven).

Northwestern had the fourth-lowest winning percentage (.418) and owns the Division I-A record for most consecutive losses, 34 from 1979-82.

"It's devastating because the players expected to win, and everyone else expected you to win," Holtz said.

"But Northwestern was a good football team, and they played well and they deserved to win."

The only thing for the team to do now is regroup, Holtz said. He spent Sunday reviewing film and meeting with his staff, and he said he planned to sit down with the team today to figure out a way to fix what went wrong.

The biggest problem Notre Dame had was the inability to make the big play.

"We turned the ball over, we gave up the big play, and we were inconsistent," Holtz said. "Now, was it a lack of effort, was it a lack of toughness? If you don't have a big-play football team, it's absolutely essential you become absolutely consistent, and this we're not, and why I don't know."

Notre Dame pulled to 17-15 on a 2-yard touchdown run by Randy Kinder with 6:15 to play, but failed on the 2-point conversion when quarterback Ron Powlus tripped over a teammate's foot and fell while dropping back.

The Irish had one more shot, but Kinder slipped on fourth-and-two at his 44 with about four minutes remaining and Northwestern ran out the clock.

"It was not a case where 10 or 11 guys broke down on it," Holtz said.

"We just never really made a play when we had to make the play."

The Wildcats set the tone with 11:47 to go in the first quarter when they recovered Kinder's fumble near the 50.

A few quick runs by Darnell Autry put Northwestern at the Notre Dame 7, where Steve Schnur connected with Dave Beazley for a touchdown.

The Wildcats didn't let up in the second half, sacking Powlus on the first series and forcing Notre Dame to punt. Three plays and 55 seconds later, Northwestern was in the end zone again and had a 17-9 lead with 12:02 left in the third quarter.

"This game is not about talent — it's about 11 guys pulling together," Northwestern coach Gary Barnett said.

Overall, Holtz said he was pleased with his defense and offense. The team even played better than it had last year against Northwestern, when Powlus threw four touchdowns and the Irish won 42-15, he said.

But there were no big plays this year.

Powlus couldn't connect with receiver Derrick Mayes near the end zone, and the running backs dropped the ball at critical times, Holtz said.

Though Holtz said he did not want to make any big changes, he did say he is considering using freshman Autry Denson at tailback.

Holtz bristled when asked whether the loss puts additional pressure on him, especially in light of last season.

"I'm not going to look over my shoulder, and I'm not even going to contemplate that," he said.

The Irish will have to bounce back by this weekend, when they play at Purdue. The Boilermakers are fresh from a 26-24 victory at then-No. 23 West Virginia.

"When you lose, when things don't go well, your confidence erodes and you just have to go from there," Holtz said. "What's important is that we sit down as a whole staff and as a team and look at this thing."

Talk is cheap, especially on the Internet

Eric Westphal
staff writer

With today's telecommunications conglomerates gouging customers in their ongoing war for profits, it's nice to see there is a way to undermine that evil empire with a simple home computer.

VocalTec Inc. has developed the Internet Phone, the first software package for personal computers that gives users real-time voice communication over the Internet.

It requires only an ordinary microphone and speakers, standard fare with most of today's multimedia packages.

Internet Phone is full of great features that make its use both easy and enjoyable. With a user-friendly interface and instructional tours, first-time users will be chatting in minutes, hands-free.

FREE STUFF

- VocalTec is offering unregistered copies of the Internet Phone software via its WWW home page. The address is as follows: (http://www.vocaltec.com)

The software interface features a graphical volume control, output control, toolbar and 10 programmable dialing buttons.

A list of callers, which is constantly updated, is used to assign your dialing buttons with the people you wish to call. Other features include audio and visual alerts that inform you of your call's status.

The biggest advantage to the software is there is no per-call cost. In fact, if you're dialed into the K-State server, it is just as free as the chat lines.

Because each call is made on the Internet, all calls are priced at the cost of the call to your local Internet provider. Whether you are calling Kansas City or Taiwan, your call is free.

The only drawback is the sound quality — it's not as clear as talking on a regular telephone. However, with a good sound card and the right software settings, the quality is at least as good as FM radio.

VocalTec is offering unregistered copies of the Internet Phone via its WWW home page (http://www.vocaltec.com). The unregistered version gives the users all of the features as the registered version but only allows 60 seconds per connection.

For $69, VocalTec will provide you with a code that will make the unregistered version fully operational.

The full version will also soon be available in several retail computer outlets such as CompUSA and Egghead Software.

Internet Phone requires a 486/25 MHz IBM-compatible PC (or faster), Microsoft Windows 3.1 (or later version), a sound card, a 14.4K modem (or faster), a microphone and a Winsock 1.1 compatible SLIP or PPP Internet connection.

With its excellent quality and features, the Internet Phone is a must-have for all Internet users.

Two versions of the software are available, half duplex and full duplex, depending on which your sound card will support.

The half version allows limited two-way, linear communication, similar to how a CB radio works. Users can talk back and forth, but not at the same time.

In contrast, the full version supports complete two-way communication, which works exactly like a telephone.

3-1/2 year marriage hoax ends in courtroom

▶ A man posing as a woman tricks a Utah husband into marriage by claiming pregnancy, faces a prison term of up to 5 years.

Associated Press

FARMINGTON, Utah — A man who posed as a woman during a 3-1/2-year marriage pleaded guilty Tuesday to defrauding the unsuspecting husband.

Felix Urioste, 34, entered guilty pleas to one count of communications fraud and one count of forgery.

He faces up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine on each count at sentencing Oct. 24. Judge Rodney Page ordered Urioste, free on $5,000 bail, to undergo a full psychological evaluation.

Urioste, posing as a woman named Leasa, married Bruce Jensen in 1991. He was arrested in Las Vegas earlier this year after using credit cards issued in the name of Leasa Jensen.

At the time, he was traveling as a man, and police had to break the news of his sexual identity to Jensen.

Jensen, a 39-year-old medical lab technician who is described by authorities as naive, is seeking an annulment. Urioste has urged the judge to grant it.

Prosecutors claim Urioste defrauded Jensen of more than $40,000 in credit-card and other expenses.

The guilty plea involved a $1,500 pre-approved loan by Household Finance Co. that had arrived in the mail at the couple's Bountiful apartment. Urioste endorsed the loan check, using Jensen's signature.

Prosecutors contend Urioste tricked Jensen into marrying him. Urioste denies that he duped Jensen but admits he claimed to be pregnant with twins before their 1991 marriage.

Prosecutor Bill McGuire has said Jensen married Urioste because he felt responsible, and the marriage was essentially celibate. He said Urioste later told Jensen the twins were stillborn.

During Tuesday's hearing, Urioste was clean-shaven. He had a mustache when he was arrested.

Afterward, Urioste was asked if he was relieved by the plea bargain.

"I am not relieved," he replied.

Jensen has refused interview requests.

"There's a lot of stuff there, but the students have got to take advantage of it. It's important for them scholastically."

Parmley said learning how to use tools like e-mail is becoming more important for students during their college career, as well as when they leave to enter the working world.

"There is a real sense among the faculty that students need to know how to utilize this tool to enhance what they're doing," he said.

Wasmer also said he believes this knowledge will be essential for students.

"Students can no longer be laissez-faire about paying attention to the computer system," he said.

President seeks support for NATO airstrikes

Associated Press

MONTEREY, Calif. — President Clinton is fully supportive of Tuesday's NATO airstrikes against the Bosnian Serbs, who refused to remove their heavy weapons around Sarajevo, the White House said Tuesday.

Clinton, wrapping up a two-day political trip in California, was notified of the bombing Tuesday morning by his military aide, who was given word by National Security Adviser Tony Lake in Washington.

"The president is fully supportive of the action being conducted by NATO military commanders," presidential spokesman Mike McCurry said.

Citing administration policy against discussing ongoing military operations, McCurry refused to say whether U.S. planes were involved in the operation or how long the strikes would continue.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said U.S. warplanes flying out of Aviano, Italy, and off the aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt in the Adriatic Sea comprised more than half the NATO strike force sent against Bosnian Serb targets Tuesday. A Western military source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said about 80 U.S. warplanes were involved in the attacks.

The targets struck Tuesday included ammunition depots and communications facilities, Bacon said. Although preventing the shelling of civilians in Sarajevo is a key aim of the strikes, the NATO planes were not always able to get at Serb artillery emplacements because of their proximity to populated areas.

Earlier at the Pentagon, Deputy Defense Secretary John White told reporters that the air attacks are designed to force Bosnian Serb compliance with allied demands, including freedom of movement for peacekeepers, no shelling of designated U.N. safe areas, and the removal of heavy weapons from U.N. exclusion zones, particularly the area around Sarajevo.

"We had a pause of four days to allow them time for compliance," White said.

that property because somebody's got it," she said. "I'm going to be one of them sitting around to find out where that money is, and if I don't, then let the chips fall where they may."

Mayor Edith Stunkel said she was willing to comply with the public's request for an auditor.

"I really don't expect to find anything illegal," she said.

The city estimates hiring an auditing firm could cost a minimum of $12,000 because some of the records will have to be reconstructed. City commissioners voted to request an audit of the city's Rehabilitation Loan Trust Fund and the 1983 CDBG Grant Funds. The request passed with a vote of 3-2.

Overseas computer company adds color

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Visit a computer store this fall, and you'll see row after row of beige machines. And then there will be the Acers.

Acer, a Taiwanese company, has become the first maker of personal computers to completely forsake beige for the black that is popular in stereos and televisions and a dark emerald that will blend into a den or breakfast nook.

"I think it's probably the hottest story of the season," said Richard Zwetchkenbaum, personal computer analyst at International Data Corp., a research firm in Framingham, Mass.

Although PC makers said they are making their computers more like other consumer electronic equipment, none have gone as far as Acer in getting rid of the bland office look.

Acer and Packard Bell Electronics Inc. in the past year each offered one model that was encased in black, but they also held on to the standard beige or eggshell color for other models. Also, Packard Bell last year offered removable color accent panels on its machines, but has since gone back to beige and gray.

Transition complex, slow

■ Polish Senator says there are old communists in new democracy

Nikola Zytkow
staff writer

Poland's transition from communism to democracy was not an overnight phenomenon.

Jerzy Wiatr, former communist and present Polish senator, said that more than six years after the political transition, a touch of the old social democracy still lingers in the Polish beliefs and politics.

At the first faculty lecture of the school year Wednesday, Wiatr discussed his perspective on the complexity of the transition, not only in terms of politics but also in terms of economics and public interest.

"The communist regime was not just swept out from power like its counterpart in Czechoslovakia," Wiatr said to an audience of about 50 people. "This compromise nature of transformation allowed Poland to move in a peaceful way."

In the neighboring Czech Republic, communists were purged completely from governmental positions. But Poland did not get rid of all communists associated with government. Wiatr was one of the communists.

"I cannot pretend to be a neutral observer of this process," Wiatr said. "I discuss something of which I have been a part of."

As an adviser to General Jaruzelski during the communist regime, Wiatr was often called upon for advice concerning various issues. Wiatr said even then he was a proponent of moving away from communism to a more socially democratic system.

Although the social democratic party now supports the new market economy and the advances Poland has accomplished, it believes not all communist ideas should be condemned. Assistance to the poor is one idea the party advocates, Wiatr said.

Even though some people in Poland would love to see all communists removed from government, the evidence that the new post communist party is being supported proves that there is still support for some of the old ideas, Wiatr said. But by no means do they want to give up their newfound personal freedom.

The post-communist party, or social democratic party, had 21 percent of the popular vote in the Sejm, the Polish parliament, in 1993, Wiatr said.

"The post-communist left looks stronger than ever before," Wiatr said, adding Poland is approaching its next election.

When the communists lost power in 1989, Wiatr said many who were very frustrated with communism had high expectations of what the transition would bring.

"The economy was a disgrace, the national debt was alarming, and the standard of living was stagnant," Wiatr said. "The old system was deeply sick, and there were great expectations that change would mean a better life. But people thought everything would be better immediately."

The first communist country in Europe to undergo the metamorphosis, Poland faced the problem of creating a market economy, Wiatr said. Previously, Poland operated under a com-

Changes in college would affect many

Becky Schulz & Sarah Lunday
Collegian

The College of Business proposed to change the number of credits required to apply for a degree track.

Pre-business majors must now complete 60 Business Administration Pre-Professions Programs required credits and have an overall 2.5 grade point average before applying for a degree track.

During a College of Business meeting Wednesday, faculty voted that pre-majors only need to complete 45 of the 60 BAPP required credits with a overall 2.5 GPA before applying for a degree track.

If passed, these changes would be retroactive and affect the entire undergraduate class, said Kay Stewart, assistant dean of the College of Business.

Also, the general topics in business class, which was offered to all undergraduates, will now be required for first-semester freshmen, she said.

The third curriculum change adds a lab to the accounting processes and controls class.

"We felt like the students needed a hands-on approach for this entry-level material," David Donnelly, professor of accounting, said.

The class meets four days a week. Donnelly said the class would meet five days a week with the lab being one of the class periods. The labs would be taught by research assistants and graduate teaching assistants with faculty supervision within the accounting department.

Each of the three proposed curriculum changes must be passed by Academic Affairs and Faculty Senate before taking effect in the fall of 1996, Stewart said.

The Department of Accounting has changed two accounting courses to general-education courses.

"The curriculum changes taking place in accounting are fully in place," Donnelly said.

Accounting for business operations and accounting for investing and financing have changed to general-education courses because the University might require 18 credit hours of general education courses for all colleges, Stewart said.

The Department of Accounting has taken steps to meet the possibility of the 18-credit-hour requirement of general-education courses, Donnelly said.

▶ INNOCENT PLEA ENTERED FOR SILENT MAN

A plea of innocent on charges of involuntary manslaughter was entered Wednesday morning for the man who was driving a cement truck that tipped over and crushed a Manhattan man in February.

Sean McAdams stood mute in the Riley County courtroom and did not enter a plea on the charges that he was driving recklessly at the time of the accident and was responsible for the death of 36-year-old Eric Martin. Judge Paul Miller entered the plea of innocent.

Martin was a K-State student in fall 1994. His 2-year-old son, Brett, was in the truck at the time of the accident but was not seriously injured.

The cement truck was westbound on Yuma Street and turning right onto 11th Street when the accident occurred.

McAdams said in a statement issued on the day of the accident that he was making a wide turn and did not see Martin's pick-up truck stopped at the side of the street.

McAdams' lawyer, Steven Opat, said his client would probably waive his right to a jury trial and have the case decided by a judge. However, the official paperwork has not yet been filed.

Motions concerning the case will be heard at 2 p.m. Oct. 12 in Riley County court.

▶ STUDENTS MUST WAIT TO GET INTO LAFENE

If you're sick, you'd better not put off calling Lafene Health Center to see a doctor.

As of 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, the earliest appointment available was Monday morning.

Some students got lucky and found appointments without the several-day wait.

"I called Tuesday afternoon and was able to get an appointment for today," said Mariah Tanner, junior in consumer and family economics.

"I told them that my nose and throat were dry from allergies, and they gave me an appointment right away."

If a student's illness is causing a lot of pain, Lafene said they will try to get to the student as soon as possible. Another way to get in sooner is to call after 4 p.m.

"If you're in pain, we try to get you in very quickly. Our most serious complaint right now is probably upper respiratory infections," Zweimiller said.

Lafene said they want to help students avoid waiting to see a doctor by encouraging them to take better care of themselves.

"Get plenty of sleep, and eat right'," Zweimiller said. "Take care of yourself and lay off the pizza."

▶ FORMER U.S. SURGEON GENERAL TO SPEAK

Former U.S. Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders will speak to K-State students and faculty Oct. 5 at McCain Auditorium.

"This was a woman who was fired for attempting to get the debate out in the open," said Phil Anderson, member of the Lou Douglass Lecture Series.

Elders was dismissed from the Clinton administration after publicly discussing sexuality, reproductive rights and masturbation.

Elders' speech, entitled "Speaking Your Mind on Controversial Issues," will address the importance of issues being debated in a democratic society.

"I can only imagine that she will make reverence to personal experiences," Anderson said.

Discussing and debating issues in society is a topic the sponsors of Elders' speech thought the University community needed to hear, Anderson said.

Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of Multicultural Affairs, said the sponsors wanted to select a person who could bring a message to campus.

"I think its a good message for students to stand in their convictions," Taylor-Archer said.

The Office of Multicultural Affairs, Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lectures, Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week and the Lou Douglas Lecture Series are sponsoring the event.

"Joycelyn Elders would be on any university's wish list to bring to campus," Anderson said.

Glickman to talk Friday

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman will be at K-State Friday to deliver the 102nd Landon Lecture. The lecture will begin at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

After serving as the 4th District Representative in the House of Representatives, Glickman took over the cabinet position in March.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture series, said he believed that students would be drawn to the lecture because of Glickman's close ties to the state.

"It will help because for 18 years he was the representative from Wichita," Reagan said.

Glickman has been a leader in agriculture for many years.

While in Congress, he worked to reorganize the U.S. Department of Agriculture and to expand the trade of agricultural goods.

The secretary of agriculture leads one of the largest agencies in the federal government. The agency manages traditional farm programs, research and education.

Reagan said he did not know the topic of Glickman's speech but had an idea of what might be included.

"I could speculate about the topic, but it would be hard to imagine him not addressing the upcoming farm bill," Reagan said.

In discussing the farm bill, Glickman is expected to say government has a role in agriculture, said Barry Flinchbaugh, professor in agri-

Site selection slows jail project

Riley County plans to hire a consultant to help choose a location to build a new jail.

Meanwhile, overcrowding in the Riley County Jail continues to be a problem.

The jail is rated for 19 prisoners but is holding an average of 31 inmates, County Commissioner Karen McCulloh said. As many as 35 to 40 inmates are housed in the jail on weekends.

McCulloh said the county has been transporting female inmates to Junction City because of overcrowding. The county also buys cell space in the Geary County Jail for male inmates because of the situation in the Riley County Jail.

JAIL FORUM

▶ The public has a chance to voice opinions on the jail issue at a forum at 7 tonight in the Manhattan City Fire Station on the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues.

McCulloh said commissioners are trying to ensure that a site is selected quickly so it can be brought before the voters during the next election.

New locations have been sought since last year's bond defeat, she said. Construction delays are partly due to the fact that Riley County

BODY FOUND; 33-YEAR-OLD FORT RILEY MAN CHARGED WITH MURDER

The body of a 32-year-old woman was found in her Warner Heights home at Fort Riley early Monday afternoon.

The woman was identified as Karen Boyd. She was married to Sgt. Dennis Boyd.

Post officials will not confirm the cause of death.

Sgt. Boyd, 33, has been charged with murder. Boyd is a member of the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 37th Armor.

Boyd is in protective custody at Irwin Army Community Hospital awaiting court-marshal. He is being treated for apparent self-inflicted stab wounds. He is listed in stable condition.

The Criminal Investigation Division is conducting the investigation.

K-STATE PRINTING SERVICES EMPLOYEE FACES CHARGES FOR VAN TRIP

Illegally taking the K-State Printing Services van for a trip to Colorado landed a 40-year-old Printing Service employee in jail.

"It would be easy as an employee where he had access to a key to the vehicle. All he would have to do is get in the van and drive off," Richard Herrman, K-State police detective, said.

The man who allegedly stole the van Friday was arrested by the Adams County Sheriff's Office in Colorado after being pulled over for a traffic violation, he said.

Adams County Sheriff's Office was not available for comment. An officer stopped the van and discovered there were active warrants issued for the driver, Herrman said.

The man could face felony theft charges in Riley County, Herrman said.

If released from Adams County, the man could be dismissed from University employment.

"My intent is that whoever is guilty will be dismissed from University employment," Harv Dahl, director of Printing Services, said.

Printing Service did not discover the van missing until the sheriff's office notified the campus police.

"Printing Services apparently was not aware it was gone at that time," Robert Mellgren, K-State Police captain, said.

NASA RESUMES LIFTOFF PLANS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With Hurricane Luis posing less of a threat to Florida, NASA decided Wednesday against moving Space Shuttle Endeavour from the launch pad to the hangar. But thunderstorms could still delay Thursday's liftoff.

The shuttle's science mission is already more than a month late, forcing NASA to postpone other flights.

Moving Endeavour to the hangar to protect it from the hurricane's damaging winds could have pushed back the mission by a week.

NASA decided against moving the shuttle because the hurricane tearing up the Caribbean was expected to turn northward and away from the U.S. mainland.

Even without the hurricane, the chances of acceptable weather for the 11:09 a.m. launch were just 40 percent.

Ground crews preparing the spacecraft were ordered indoors Wednesday because of lightning from storms unrelated to Luis.

If the hurricane heads this way, NASA could call off the launch at any point, even after fueling, test director John Stealey, said.

Complicating matters was the possibility of rough seas and high wind offshore.

DEFENSE SPENDING INCREASES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate agreed to a costly missile defense system, then passed a $265 billion military budget Wednesday that seeks billions for Navy ships, smart bombs, FA-18 fighters and improved tanks.

Final passage in a 64-34 vote came only after Republicans and Democrats compromised on a missile defense measure.

The bill contains the added missile defense money the Republicans wanted but waters down language that would have violated the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

The measure authorizing expenditures for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 calls for only a slight increase over this year's defense budget of $264 billion.

But the Senate bill would add $7 billion to what President Clinton requested for next year, with most of the additional money going into weapons programs.

Most of those voting against the bill were liberal Democrats such as Sens. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Christopher Dodd of Connecticut, who opposed adding money to the Pentagon budget while domestic programs are being cut.

Board elects first student chairman

Cristina Janney
city/government editor

The K-State Board of Student Publications elected its first student chairman Wednesday night.

Aaron Otto, junior in pre-law, was elected unanimously to the position, which had been held for nine years by the director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, Carol Oukrop.

The board by-laws were amended in the spring to change the chair position from the director of the journalism school to an elected student member of the board.

Otto was instrumental in getting the by-laws changed.

"This is an experiment to see what it would be like," he said. "We are doing this on a trial basis. I would be the first to suggest we change it if it doesn't work."

Otto was late to the meeting and did not discover until after the vote that he was the new chairman.

Oukrop said she supported the change.

"As long as there is a student willing to put in the time and effort, I think it is superb," she said.

Otto worked for the Collegian for three semesters and was a member of the board last year. He is also an arts and sciences senator.

Otto said he did not think being both a senator and chairman of the board would be a conflict. Student Senate allocates money to Student Publications Inc.

He said his positions on both boards could help improve communication between the two bodies.

The board voted at its Wednesday meeting to add a stipulation to the by-laws to also make the board secretary a student.

Lin Bliss, senior in pre-medicine, was elected to this position.

Sophomore debaters go undefeated at tourney

■ Win gives debate team members confidence

Gina Buster
staff reporter

One K-State debate team recently posted a perfect record at the preseason tournament sponsored by the University of Vermont, Aug. 11-12.

Lori Davis, sophomore in speech communication, and Grant Denny, sophomore in political science and speech communication, were one of only two teams to remain undefeated at the tournament.

"The tournament was good practice and gave us a lot of confidence knowing that we can win tournaments. It's great for our credibility to go undefeated," Davis said.

For the second year, Courtney Knapple, junior in speech communication, and Isaac West, sophomore in speech communication and history, qualified for the season-opening University of South Carolina Round Robin which will be Sept. 20-21.

During the summer, coaches submit their teams' records to the University of South Carolina.

Teams are invited to the tournament based on the last year's performance.

Knapple and West reached the elimination round of the national championship tournament last spring.

"I was really proud that last year we made it that far as a sophomore and freshman team, but it was still a disappointment. This year, we have set a goal of making it to quarters at nationals," Knapple said.

The forensics team has one returning junior, four returning sophomores, one senior transfer student, one junior transfer student and four freshmen.

"This year, we have a combination of youth and hunger. Because of the team's youth, they will get tricked some early on in the season, but that will only increase their hunger. These teams want to make their mark," John Burtis, director of forensics, said.

The topics for the forensic team this season deals with Latin America, and they were able to vote on their choice of topic resolutions for the upcoming season. The specific resolutions will be announced Friday.

K-State debate teams tend to favor policy-oriented topics so they can weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a policy rather than make moral and value critiques, Davis said.

After members receive their specific resolutions, they begin research on them.

"In the weeks before the first tournament, I should spend at least five

UPC snags top-notch entertainment for K-State

UPC deserves our praise and congratulations for consistently bringing quality entertainment as well as thought-provoking speakers to K-State.

Another two thumbs up for the Union Program Council.

The committee has not allowed itself to slack off on its commitment to bring quality speakers and entertainment to K-State.

Jerzy Wiatr, Polish senator and former communist leader, came to campus Wednesday, thanks to UPC.

Despite the low student turnout for the Wiatr lecture, UPC did a good job of getting the word out to students with hundreds of fluorescent colored posters hanging all over campus.

Last semester, we praised UPC for bringing such speakers as Joe Clark, the character behind Morgan Freeman's role in "Lean on Me," and Sarah Weddington, the lawyer who argued the winning side of Roe v. Wade.

And who can forget the confusing but interesting lecture from Timothy Leary, the man who led the world in the effort to keep mind-altering drugs legal.

UPC also brought in the Dave Matthews Band, Big Head Todd and the Monsters, Live and Weezer last year.

Although some would have been satisfied with one season of good entertainment, UPC is not resting. This year, it is continuing to show its devotion to students. It isn't stopping at Wiatr — UPC is also scheduled to bring Soul Asylum and Matthew Sweet in concert to Bramlage Coliseum Oct. 2.

UPC deserves our praise and congratulations for consistently bringing quality entertainment as well as thought-provoking speakers to K-State. Hopefully, UPC's record of service to K-State students will continue in the months to come.

Parking dilemma smashed easily

Maybe you have noticed there is much construction going on at K-State.

COLUMN

BRAD SEABOURN

Maybe you have seen the effect it has had on parking. Maybe you have, on numerous occasions, stopped your car while cruising for a parking space, stepped out with sledgehammer in hand and casually pounded the nearest parked car into a pile of metal and rubber the size of a 5-oz. can of Hormel Vienna Sausages.

I know I have.

Let's get one thing perfectly clear: My column today is NOT about the parking situation at K-State. However, while I am thinking about it (pound, smash) let me put into print (smash, pound, smash) what I know is on the mind (smashsmashsmash) of nearly every person at K-State who does not have (poundpoundpound) valet parking or is not President Jon Wefald: "WHERE IN THE NAME OF PEANUT BUTTER AND JELLY SANDWICHES DID ALL THESE #@/*$%! CARS COME FROM?" (smash)

Again, let me say this column is NOT about the critical parking problem at K-State, but while I am still on the subject, let me add I am positive there is yet a second question on the mind of nearly every person at K-State and quite possibly Wefald (although he should know the answer to this one): "WHO IS THE BOOB THAT BRILLIANTLY CONCLUDED WE COULD ELIMINATE PARKING SPACE WITHOUT CREATING OTHER PLACES TO PARK?"

Come on, guys! I've got two grade-school kids who consistently take this kind of predicament to its logical conclusion on a daily basis.

Dallas (my 10-year-old son): "Look at this neat skyscraper I'm making out of 11.3 billion Legos, half of which I will strategically leave scattered around the house in random fashion for Dad to step barefoot on in the middle of the night, causing him to elicit a profuse discharge of four-letter words I have never heard before."

Dustin (my 7-year-old son): "COOL! Hey ... wait a minute! There's no place to park my 4-wheel-drive, all-terrain, space-alien mulching-mower tractor with its removable, space-alien, scumbag blaster!"

Dallas: "I don't care about your stupid tractor. I'M in charge of building a skyscraper."

Dustin: "Ha haaaaa! Then, PREPARE TO DIE YOU ALIEN, SCUMBAG, SKYSCRAPER PERSON!"

(Skyscraper explodes into 22.6 billion tiny Lego skyscraper pieces.)

Now, even though this column is NOT about the escalating parking fiasco at K-State, I am not, by any stretch of the imagination, predicting a similar demise for the alien, scumbag, skyscraper persons and their construction work here at K-State.

Alien, scumbag, skyscraper people come in as many shapes and sizes as us normal people. ... there are GOOD, alien, scumbag, skyscraper people, and there are also BAD, alien, scumbag, skyscraper people.

They should be dealt with on a "scumbag-by-scumbag" basis. But, because I don't believe any of that rubbish, let me just say, "YOU ALIEN SCUMBAGS HAVE 24 HOURS TO CREATE ADDITIONAL PLACES TO PARK, OR I AM GOING TO BLOW ANDERSON HALL INTO 22.6 BILLION, LEGO-SIZED PIECES OF NATIVE LIMESTONE!"

Ha! Just kidding. Make that 12 hours ... I have a 9:30 a.m. class.

No, seriously, while this column is NOT about the horrendous, disgusting, parking lot cover-up involving high-ranking K-State administration officials who have accepted untold millions in bribes and shady land and construction deals, I have a simple solution to this dilemma: eliminate the University entirely and just give everyone their respective degrees. Class is dismissed.

Okay, okay, I know on the surface this sounds a little radical, but hear me out. By giving all students their degrees, you eliminate the need for a university; and by eliminating the University and all of its buildings (this next part is my favorite) IMAGINE ALL THE SPACE THIS WOULD OPEN UP FOR PARKING? We could replace Anderson and Fairchild halls with one great big hole in the ground, fill it with water, and offer co-ed, nude swimming and sunbathing.

I can't speak for his wife, but I think Wefald would go for it.

Despite the fact this column is NOT about uniting all the downtrodden students and workers who can't find a place to park into a subversive, highly-trained, underground strike-force willing to die a tortuous, but glorious, death fighting the alien, scumbag, skyscraper people in order to rectify the scandalous K-StateGate parking disaster (call 1-800-GET-EVEN; leave your name and number), I know there is one final question on your minds.

Comrades: "How do we start the revolution and overthrow the capitalist, alien, scumbag, skyscraper oppressors?"

Leave a few million Legos scattered around their homes in the middle of the night.

They will never know what hit them.

Relativism oozes hypocrisy

In the few weeks since school has started, I have seen and heard many people proclaiming there is no longer such a thing as right and wrong, that societal norms and values have replaced these concepts, and that any point of view is just as good as another point of view.

This world view is known as relativism, and many in this nation have come to believe it wholeheartedly.

The core beliefs of relativism have led to virtual mob rule within this country, as politicians sit on their hands when polls shows that a certain policy is unfavorable among 1,000 people. These beliefs have also come into favor within the world of academia, evidenced by teachers and professors asking students to disregard issues and focus on the art of arguing for fear someone's point of view might get stepped on.

Although relativism is nothing new to the rest of the world, it is new to this nation. It has been widely promoted, whether explicitly or implicitly, as a substitution for faith in a God that maintains absolutes within the context of what is right and wrong.

COLUMN

JEREMY STEPHENS

Relativism is also hypocrisy unto itself. For the one thing virtually all those who believe in relativism fail to realize, is that there is no such thing as relativity. Logic dictates that if the only thing one can be absolutely sure of is that there are no absolutes, there must still be absolutes. The question is not whether there are absolutes, but rather, what is absolute? Relativists who claim otherwise are trying to sneak out of a rather difficult loop with an intellectually lazy answer.

Defining tolerance and morality within the setting of relativism leads to further hypocrisy and wringing of hands. Relativism demands there is neither right nor wrong, only points of view.

In addition, it claims each individual should define morality according to themselves, that one morality is as good as another and that we should love each other and live in harmony (a concept borrowed from Christianity).

However, relativists find fault with those who hold absolutes, even though relativism maintains that one morality is no better than another.

For those of you who are taking offense to this column, I say to you that if there really was such a thing as relativism, you would have no problem reading this because my beliefs are just as good as anyone else's beliefs.

Therefore, you should have not even have ground to stand on to defend your beliefs. To do so, implies the existence of absolutes and the inaccuracy of relativism. In fact, I would propose that some would like to stop the rest of this column from appearing in the name of fairness or mean-spiritedness.

"Defining tolerance and morality within the setting of relativism leads to further hypocrisy and wringing of hands."

JEREMY STEPHENS

This is just the beginning of the problem. The logical end to relativity is to remove all laws and their enforcement because what might be wrong to one person could be right to another. If there is no right and wrong, there can be neither guilt nor punishment.

If relativism is accurate, I should be able to rob a large bank, drop out of school, and live at a château in France until someone robs me. Why can't I do this? Two words: It's wrong.

History shows that absolutes can be maintained in two ways: voluntarily or involuntarily.

You can either do what is right or wait for the government of relativism.

Authoritarianism in a centralized state, where there will be absolutes, but they will be determined by a small group of people.

Because our society remains under the influence of relativism, it is no small wonder that crime is on the rise and police protection must expand to maintain order.

I say this not because I think I am right but because it is part of the only source that can withstand scrutiny under the most demanding intellectual tests: God, who is revealed through the Bible.

Everyone will make their own world view and the moral decisions that accompany it either by default or by choice, and ultimately, every world view must be based on faith, whether in a big bang, an infinite personal god, or some other object.

This might raise the question of why my world view and morality are better than anyone else's. I will be the first to say that it is not.

It's not a question of moral issues or even world views, but rather their sources. It is a choice between imperfection within a limited humanity and its trendiest ideas or perfection in a limitless God. Stop and think. The choice is yours.

ENGLISH POLICIES

Editor,

I was surprised but happy to find out K-State has a college-wide escort service now. I attended school there from 1980-'84 and lived in Haymaker Hall. There, we had a small escort service of about eight to ten gentlemen that escorted women, and sometimes men, to and from classrooms, dorms, Aggieville, etc.

We never had too many people to go do this service, so we had to rely on each other and the good buddy system.

The people we helped really enjoyed our help in letting them have peace of mind at night without worrying about all the prowlers, etc.

I was surprised to see you now have a college-wide service at a school with over 5,000 more students than when I attended, and you still could not find more than 40 people to help with this service?

I have always prided myself on the fact, and still do, that the good people at K-State would do anything to help others out.

Perhaps it is because it is early in the semester and not enough people know about the service to apply. I hope so, and that it's not from being lazy or uncaring for your fellow classmates, many of whom are women who need some protection.

The ones I helped were genuinely thankful, and many even brought me cookies as thanks for the daily or weekly escorts.

So come on, you K-Staters, let's help out this worthwhile institution, and show your Wildcat Pride!

SmatteRings
by Scott Allen Miller

Man discovers pregnant "wife" is really a husband

Bruce Jensen, formerly of Bountiful, Wyo., has filed for an annulment of his marriage on the grounds of irreconcilable differences. He learned about these differences after his spouse was busted on fraud charges, when the cops told him the person he'd been hitched to for 3-1/2 years was actually a fellow named Felix Urioste. They got married after Urioste told Jensen "she" was pregnant with his Jensen's twins, which "she" later claimed were stillborn. Police described him as naive. They were being nice. ("What? Girls don't pee standing up?")

Driver packing heat has final laugh in carjacking

Next time you're shopping for a luxury vehicle, splurge for the optional firearms. Carl Reese spotted a Lexus in Coral Springs, Fla., and decided to carjack it. Reese forced the driver, Paul Brite, into the trunk and, realizing that Brite might have a cellular phone in the trunk that could be used to call the police, pulled over to take the phone away. When Reese opened the trunk, he found that Brite didn't have a cellular phone but did have two loaded pistols trained on him. Brite ordered Reese onto the ground, but Reese grabbed for his own gun. Brite then shot and killed him. Brite's auto theft insurance premium probably just went way down.

Work that runway; just don't let the pope catch you

Look out Giorgio Armani. Hold on to your butts Benetton. Pope John Paul II has become a fashion critic. The Associated Press reported that Italian fashion designers are being chastised for their use of nudity and semi-nudity in fashion shows. "The nude, which once was relegated to life behind closed doors, has acquired the function of aiding the fashion world, of being an instrument of publicity to gain attention for their products," said a Vatican official. Apparently someone at the Vatican forgot that God designs one-of-a-kind birthday suits millions of times a year.

Every chicken has the right to a full, happy life

Reuters reported that a chicken fell into a 60-foot-deep well in Nazlat Imara, some 240 miles south of Cairo, Egypt. A farmer tried to rescue the chicken but drowned. Five others, including his sister and two brothers, all drowned trying to save the chicken, the farmer or each other. The chicken, however, managed to survive. If this had happened in this country, animal-rights activists would be suing the well-digger for animal cruelty.

What mother wouldn't set a few fires for her son?

Entrepreneurship. That's why 60-year-old Joy Glassman has been charged with arson. Her son was a firefighter in the near California's Shasta Trinity National Forest, so she allegedly set 11 fires in the area in order to help her son get more work. "She just did it on her own, figuring she was helping him," said Mark Reina, a California Forestry Department investigator. Reina said he doesn't believe that Glassman's son was aware of her plans, but he has resigned anyway. Glassman could get 20 years for trying to drum up more business for her son. The guilt-trip-laden letters from prison should be a hoot: "I try to help you make some extra money, and look at the thanks I get. I get 20 years; that's what I get! A fine son you are!" Sheesh.

Grandma ticketed for boy's public pee in the park

When nature called, 4-year-old William Schlesinger answered — and so did security in Central Park, turning a piddling problem into a tour of city bureaucracy for his grandmother. Nancy Stein, 56, has gone through the administrative looking glass since May 23, when two scooter-riding officers watched her desperate grandson relieve himself behind a bush and handed her a $50 ticket.

William had approached his grandmother during a walk through the park and launched his criminal career with these words: "I have to go." Not in five minutes, he added — NOW.

Two enforcement agents were on the scene before Stein had buttoned her grandson's pants. The agents demanded identification — thankfully, only from the grandmother — and cited her for violation of NYC Administrative Code 16-118.6 for William's deposit of a "noxious liquid."

City officials have said they will recommend the ticket be thrown out.

Treasures in Topeka

A mix of fantasy and history transports viewers back in time

story by Kevyn Jacobs

Walking through the doors of the Treasures of the Czars exhibition in Topeka is like being transported into a world of fantasy. The exhibit is filled with the mystique of a culture that is alien to most people in the United States.

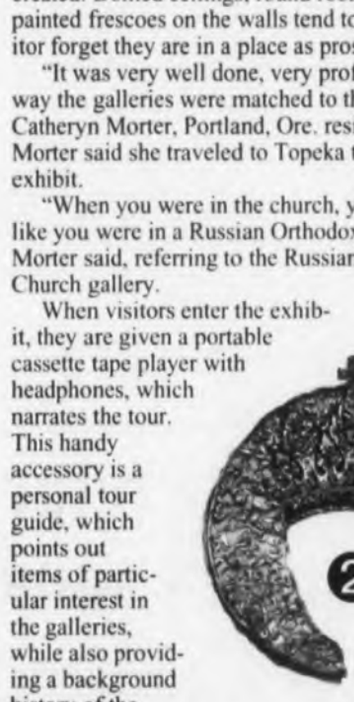
The exhibit is a trip through 300 years of the Romanov Dynasty, which ruled the largest nation on earth from 1613 until the family's bloody demise in the Russian Revolution of 1917. The word czar, which means Caesar in Russian, was the title given to the members of this monarchy.

Topeka is the second North American stop for the traveling exhibit of the Moscow Kremlin Museums. Many of the 265 pieces on display have never been seen outside the Kremlin walls.

As the exhibit's curators eagerly point out, such an exhibit would have been unthinkable before the collapse of the Soviet Union.

The former Montgomery Ward building at the corner of Fourth and Quincy in Topeka has been renovated to house the exhibit. Galleries that are replicas of rooms in the Kremlin itself have been created. Domed ceilings, round rooms and hand-painted frescoes on the walls tend to make the visitor forget they are in a place as prosaic as Topeka.

"It was very well done, very professional the way the galleries were matched to the exhibits," Catheryn Morter, Portland, Ore. resident, said. Morter said she traveled to Topeka to see the exhibit.



"When you were in the church, you really felt like you were in a Russian Orthodox church," Morter said, referring to the Russian Orthodox Church gallery.

When visitors enter the exhibit, they are given a portable cassette tape player with headphones, which narrates the tour. This handy accessory is a personal tour guide, which points out items of particular interest in the galleries, while also providing a background history of the Romanov Dynasty and the Russian world.

The first stop in the museum is at a theater, where visitors are shown a brief film giving the background of the Romanov Dynasty and describing the three centuries they ruled. Visitors are briefly introduced to the histories of each of the czars and czarinas and the important events that occurred during their reigns.

After the video, the visitors are led past a case containing one of the keys to the Kremlin gates into the 17th Century Consecration of the Czar gallery. Here, artifacts are found from the earliest days of the Romanov Dynasty, including the disturbing casket lid of Czarevich Dimitrii, son of Ivan the Terrible, who was murdered in 1591 at the age of 9.

Beautifully worked in gilded silver and studded with rubies, emeralds, sapphires and pearls, Dimitrii's face looks out at the visitor from the lid.

Dimitrii's story is but one of many the visitor hears here — tales of treachery and skullduggery are a common theme as one strolls past the gold, silver, jewels and furs. One is constantly reminded that the czars' history has a dark side and an unhappy ending.

You can also find in this gallery the stunning Cap of Monomach of the Second Order, which is the crown worn by Peter the Great at his coronation at the age of 10 in 1682. Made of gold, studded with precious stones and trimmed in sable, it is crafted in the form of a traditional Eastern headdress. Nearby is a gilded icon cover, called an oklad, which holds two slivers of wood said to be pieces of the cross on which Jesus was crucified.

The next gallery is the first of two devoted to the Russian Orthodox Church. During the rule of the czars, church and state were one, and many treasures of state were religious artifacts.

The Russian Orthodox Church followed the philosophy that beauty was a sign of God's presence, and no expense was spared on the collection of elaborate robes and tapestries of brocade and lace, gilded crucifixes and other religious artifacts.

The gallery of 17th Century Royal Parades and Ceremonial Arms houses a collection of ceremonial arms, uniforms and heraldry. According to the exhibit, any time a czar left the Kremlin, he was accompanied by a royal parade of thousands all bedecked in gilded finery.

Most spectacular were the "Horses of the Royal Saddle." Saddles, stirrups and harnesses were faced with gold and silver and trimmed in precious stones.

Horsecloths were studded in pearls and gilt silver knee caps were placed on the horses legs. The array was topped off by intricate, clanking silver chains that connected the horses to each other.

The fifth gallery, devoted to 17th Century Ambassadorial Ceremony, is possibly one of the most exquisite. The gallery is a recreation of a reception hall where foreign dignitaries were entertained. Beneath the arched ceiling, the walls are hand painted in frescoes depicting scenes from the Bible and Russian history.

Two galleries represent a shift in Russian courtly life, displaying objects from the lives of Peter the Great and Catherine the Great, who both worked to bring Western culture and the Enlightenment to the Russian court. This is evidenced by the Western-style clothing and artwork on display.

Further on is the replica of St. George Hall, which houses the magnificent throne of Paul I. The hall is almost two meters high and constructed of gilded birchwood and upholstered in crimson velvet. Emblazoned along the back of the throne is the double-headed eagle, the royal crest of the Romanovs.

At the end of the tour, one comes into a round room that contains the centerpiece of the treasures — the fabulous Faberge Tricentennial "Easter Egg," which was a gift from Nicholas I to his wife Alexandra in 1913.

The egg commemorates 300 years of Romanov rule. Miniature portraits of all 18 Romanov czars and czarinas are enlarged to show detail all along the room's perimeter.

Almost as intriguing as the exhibit itself is the Czars Gift Shop on the first floor of the museum. Here one can buy the usual assortment of T-Shirts, calendars, Russian flags, Faberge Egg reproductions and various other souvenirs. Additionally, there is an astounding array of Russian-made craft items, such as matryoshka nesting dolls, khokhloma kitchenware and wooden Bogorodsk toys with moving parts.

Visitors leaving the exhibit express awe at the sheer numbers of treasures.

"I've never seen so much gold in my life," Kim Patton, Topeka resident, said.

Karen Stanley, Kansas City, Kan. resident, said she agreed.

"I went and saw the King Tut exhibit when it was here in the United States, and this is just as spectacular," Stanley said.

Sean Snyder takes time out to coach, still on the road to the NFL

Chris May
staff reporter

Sean Snyder is at the crossroads in his life. He said he desperately wants to make it back into the National Football League, but at the same time he's enjoying being with his father again at K-State.

The former all-American punter is back at K-State starting his first year as administrative assistant. His professional career is on hold as he returns where he started eight years ago with his father.

Sean started his football career at the University of Iowa, where his father, Bill Snyder, was an offensive coordinator.

"I was recruited with a handful of Texas schools and the University of Iowa, and that was when my dad was there. I went there just because the fact I wanted to play under my dad," Sean said.

He was red-shirted his freshman year at Iowa, and the next year his father left for K-State.

Sean stayed at Iowa because he was going to be a starter, but after the first game against the University of Oregon, he was benched.

"We played against Oregon, and I had a halfway decent game. It wasn't a great game," Sean said.

After sitting out that season, Sean decided to transfer to K-State.

The combination of not playing and knowing he was good enough to play made Sean look at other schools.

Sean was forced to sit out his sophomore year at K-State because of NCAA transfer rules, so he only had two years left to play.

"Luckily, Chris Cobb was a punter here and he was a senior so really the punting job was wide open, the field goal duties were wide open. So the opportunities were here and let alone my dad came down here. It just worked out nice," Sean said.

Because of Coach Snyder's passion for his job, he wasn't always there to see Sean play in high school. Coach Snyder finally got that opportunity to be with Sean when they went to Iowa.

"When I went to the University of Iowa, we recruited Sean and brought him to the University of Iowa, and it was really the most enjoyable relationship that he and I had ever had because we had a chance to be together." Coach Snyder said. "It wasn't just on the field, we would spend a little bit of time together every day."

When Coach Snyder left to go to K-State, he said he missed that time he had with Sean. He said he was glad when Sean came to K-State.

> "When you play football for so long and things go right for you, it's really hard to just throw it aside and go to work a nine-to-five."

> K-STATE FOOTBALL ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT

"Nothing could replace just having him here and being able to sit down just for five minutes and talking each day," Coach Snyder said. "It's just something that up until he was 18 or 19 years old I never had the opportunity to do that with him, so it was very special. Now, I've grown accustomed to that and I've enjoyed that."

Sean made a name for himself at K-State, and his statistics say it all.

Sean was the first Wildcat ever to earn the first team all-America honors from the Associated Press his senior year in 1992, along with several other awards.

He has school records for average yards per punt with 44.7, game-day record of 52.8 yards on 12 punts against Colorado, and the best punting average for a career with 43 yards. Sean was also awarded the special teams most-valuable-player award for 1991 and 1992.

After K-State, Sean signed with the Phoenix Cardinals as a free agent in 1993. Sean knew it wasn't going to last long; he just didn't realize how short it would be.

"I knew I wasn't going to be staying there because they had an all-pro punter," Sean said.

"So, my intentions and what they indicated to me was that I'll go and get in four preseason games and I'll be able to punt and show what I can do. But, it didn't quite work out that way and I got cut after two games."

After that, Sean came back to K-State as a student assistant and finished school. This gave him the opportunity to keep working out so he could try out again.

Sean signed a year later with the San Diego Chargers, but after three months he was cut.

"Everybody for some reason has a complex in the NFL thinking that a punter or a kicker has to have three years experience. And it's hard to get in; you just have to to be lucky. You have to find somebody who will give you the opportunity," Sean said.

Sean came back to K-State and is helping out with the football program.

"He does some charting, some timing, and works with Bruce Van De Velde and Mark Mangino, our recruiting coordinator," Coach Snyder said of Sean's position.

Sean said he sees himself coaching at the Division I level someday, not in an office job from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"When you play football for so long and things go right for you, it's really hard to just throw it aside and go work a nine-to-five," Sean said.

And like his father, Sean has a passion for the game.

"There's a lot of freedom in the nine-to-five job, but you don't have the thrill of game days and you don't have the thrill of preparing for the teams," Sean said.

"You don't go through the trial and error of practices. There's just too many things that go on that keep you in — that keep you going, that keep you motivated."

Sean said he isn't satisfied, though. Next spring he'll be trying out again to get back into the NFL.

"No one has ever said 'Sean you can't cut it, it's not going to happen. I've been told that it will happen, that's it just a matter of finding the right place at the right time," he said.

Ripken, new record good for baseball

Call him "Iron Man," call him stud or just call him Cal. But never call him lucky.

Last night, Cal Ripken Jr. proved he really is the most durable and devoted man in baseball. Through injuries, slumps, criticism and threats against his life, Ripken has done what many thought couldn't be done. He has broken Lou Gehrig's consecutive-games-played record of 2,130 games.

COLUMN

KELBY SCHERER

Ripken stepped on the field May 30, 1982, in a Baltimore uniform at the ripe age of 21 and has played in every Orioles game since. That is not to say his career was without injury. During the streak, Ripken suffered serious ankle and knee injuries that nearly caused him to miss a game.

But despite the pain, he continued to play in order to keep the streak alive. What's more impressive is that he played the entire streak in the field — never as a pinch-hitter or designated hitter.

Criticism has been a problem for Ripken in the past and has been especially thick this month as he closed in on the record. He is obviously a great hitter. But, as do all great hitters, he has had his share of slumps.

While he struggled through a slump, there was always talk of giving him a couple of days off to rest because he was only hurting the team. During a slump, taking someone out of the lineup for a few days doesn't mean it's going to bring their bat back when they come back.

Ripken has even had to contend with criticism from Mr. Baseball himself, Larry King. You know, the guy with the talk show. Good ol' Larry seems to think that Ripken purposely shouldn't break the record for fear that people will forget who Gehrig was.

Good call, Larry. I'm sure everyone has just about forgotten Babe Ruth since Hank Aaron broke his record for most career home runs. And who can remember the player's record of most career hits that Pete Rose broke? I think his name was Ty Cobb. Isn't he in the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame or something?

I have only one serious question to ask Larry King: Who did Gehrig overtake when he broke the record for consecutive games played, or did you forget? (It was Everett Scott, for those who are curious.)

Something even more idiotic than criticism by Larry "what's his name?" King is the numerous death threats Ripken has received.

Yes, America's finest citizens have threatened to kill Ripken if he breaks the record.

Threats are obviously nothing new to the famous. Aaron was threatened when he was about to break Ruth's record. Mitch Williams was threatened when he threw a pitch that lost the World Series. And how could we forget about the knob that stabbed Monica Seles in order to knock her out of the No. 1 spot in women's tennis?

Aside from his overwhelming durability and determination, Ripken is simply a class act. He is not by any means cocky or flashy. He does his job day-in and day-out without complaint. He is influential on and off the field and a pillar in the community. He loves his family, friends, teammates, fans and especially the game. Ripken is a model person just as much as a model baseball player.

When Ripken passed Gehrig's record Wednesday night, an unexplainable thrill filled the hearts of baseball fans all over the world. Today, an overwhelming pride and joy is in the minds of all those who talk about it. "He did it," they'll say. "It was long and hard, but by God he did it, and we love him for it."

He'd have done it even if it meant catching the ball with his teeth.

Baseball might have suddenly found a way to win its way back into the hearts of America and possibly regain much of the respect and integrity it has lost from the strike of 1994. Ripken overtook an "untouchable" record Wednesday, and it was the best thing baseball has seen since Nolan Ryan set the 5,000 strikeout mark.

For baseball's sake, it couldn't have come at a better time, and it couldn't have been done by a better person.

Osborne bans student reporters from Nebraska football practices

Associated Press

Omaha, Neb. — Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne has banned reporters from the student newspaper from football practice because of two critical cartoons, a move that was denounced by a professor and could bring legal action.

"I don't think the coach has any legal authority to do what he's doing," Alfred Pagel Jr., University of Nebraska professor, said.

"He's the coach. Coaches tend to think that everything that affects their team is their business."

Osborne declared the season-long ban Tuesday for Daily Nebraskan reporters after the cartoons were published last week. He called the cartoons inappropriate.

"Attending our practices is a privilege, not a right," Osborne said.

Osborne seems to be the only person sure of that. The university's legal team began looking into the matter Wednesday but did not have an opinion by late afternoon.

Pagel and Daily Nebraskan Editor J. Christopher Hain said they think the ban is illegal.

"This sort of issue is one that's left up to each institution," said Steve Mallonee, director of legislative services for the NCAA.

"I've never heard of something like this before, but that doesn't mean it's not happening."

Hain said there were no plans to send student reporters to practice.

"We would like to resolve this as peacefully as possible," he said. "If Coach Osborne decides to stick to his guns, perhaps we will have to do something. Maybe we show up at practice. Maybe we look at legal action."

Coaches have closed practices for years to avoid being scouted by the opposition.

Nebraska closes its practices after 15 minutes to everyone, and former Colorado Coach Bill McCartney did the same thing during preparations for Nebraska.

But the ban has raised questions of whether the school reporters — who are fee-paying students — can be kept from practice or anywhere else on campus.

"It's a good question, whether individual reporters or even students can be banned from practice," said James Griesen, the university's vice chancellor for student affairs. School officials said there was no official policy on barring people from team practices.

The first cartoon, published last Thursday, showed a caricature of receiver Riley Washington practicing in a prison jumpsuit and a ball and chain while four other players watched.

Washington is charged with attempted murder in a shooting Aug. 2 at a Lincoln, Neb. convenience store. He has practiced with the team since late last month.

The other cartoon depicted running back Lawrence Phillips driving a car with dollar bills blowing out of the back. "Phillips" is on the license plate.

The NCAA is reviewing the relationship between Phillips, a junior from West Covina, Calif., and owners of the group home where he lived as a teen-ager.

The owners have said they leased a 1995 Mustang convertible for Phillips and provided him with other benefits.

Osborne said the Daily Nebraskan will continue to be welcome at his weekly news conference.

"I have not told the student athletes that they couldn't talk to the Daily Nebraskan — nor will I," he said.

James Mehsling, who drew the cartoons, said Osborne was overreacting.

"The big trouble, as I understand it, was that all of the football players (watching) were white," Mehsling said. "A lot of people may have taken it as racist," because Washington is black.

Mehsling said he does cartoons on whatever subject matter is hot or lends itself to people's minds.

"Sometimes it's more fun to do local cartoons because they get more of a rise," he said.

"Controversy is not necessarily a goal, but when it happens, it's a nice compliment."

Hain said the Washington cartoon was intended to criticize Nebraska's decision to allow the junior to practice.

The Phillips cartoon, he said, simply raises questions under investigation by the NCAA.

"Whether successful or not, sports figures and their mishaps are part of the public discussion," Hain said.

"Nebraskans care deeply about what happens to the team. The football team should expect to be on the editorial page."

Charity Swartz returns to cross country squad

KSU Sports Information

K-State cross country coach Terry Drake has announced that sophomore Charity Swartz has chosen to return to the Wildcat women's cross country squad.

Swartz informed Drake that she had decided to leave the team for personal reasons prior to the start of the 1995 fall season but has since elected to continue her collegiate career.

"I think Charity realized the extent to which she would miss competing and being a part of this team," Drake said. "We are pleased to have her return."

Swartz emerged as one of the Big 8's top harriers, running in the No. 1 spot for the Wildcats as a freshman. She capped off her initial collegiate season with a 50th-place finish at the NCAA Championships.

The varsity season gets underway for K-State Sept. 16 when both the men's and women's squads compete at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence.

▶ CAMPUS RENOVATIONS

Changes have, will improve buildings, increase efficiency

■ Calvin, Edwards and Waters receive facelifts

Rebecca Klenklen
staff reporter

Classroom and office renovations across campus are taking a multimedia twist.

The Division of Facilities maintenance shops are revamping Edwards, Waters and Calvin halls by installing new lighting, seating and multimedia equipment for lecturers and students.

"The media technology that will be installed in these rooms is now more cost-effective than before," said Gerald Carter, director of Facilities Planning and University architect.

The Classroom Improvement Program funded the renovations as part of campus repairs and rehabilitation received from the education fund.

New multimedia equipment will be installed in Willard 114, Umberger 105 and Waters 328.

The new multimedia equipment will include a projector system and a Macintosh Power PC 6100. The light systems will also be upgraded to work in conjunction with the projector system, said Don Hogg, associate director of engineering and Education and Communication Center.

A large amount of renovations have taken place during summer and University breaks, Carter said.

Faculty are being trained to use the multimedia equipment available in the rooms, and once trained they will be the first to lecture in the rooms, said Helen Cooper, assistant director of Facilities Planning.

■ Edwards Hall

Plans to convert Edwards Hall from a residence hall into an office building are in progress.

The Human Resources and Employee Relations department plans to move to Edwards from Anderson Hall in October or November, said Helen Cooper, assistant director of Facilities Planning.

"There is no time specifically set for the other offices," Cooper said.

The FONE Crisis Center in Fairchild Hall, the Division of Biology grant program offices in Ackert Hall, human ecology grant program offices in Justin Hall, and the Department of Public Safety in Ward Hall are scheduled to move to Edwards sometime this fall, she said.

"Parking Services and the K-State Police department hope to move after commencement in May," Cooper said.

The renovations in Edwards Hall are minor, Cooper said.

Most of the departments are paying for new painting and carpet if necessary. The departments will also pay for moving expenses, she said.

"The main renovation to Edwards Hall is making the bathrooms accessible to handicapped clients and personnel in the offices," Cooper said.

■ Waters Hall

Waters 328 has been significantly renovated from the standard lecture room, which has straight rows of seating, to a case-study classroom.

"We have taken this room from a 1920s classroom to a turn-of-the-century room that is helpful to both teachers and students," Carter said.

The case-study room has tiered, U-shape seating, and a lecturer can stand in the center of the room and easily interact with students.

The room seated about 100 people before the renovation. But with new tables and swivel chairs, it will seat about 74, Cooper said.

New computers and audiovisual equipment have been added to benefit the teacher and students.

"We plan to upgrade other classrooms with the new multimedia equipment eventually," Hogg said.

■ Calvin Hall

The third floor of Calvin Hall is being transformed into a Student Learning Center.

The renovated space was an attic that has been used for storage since the hall was built.

"We are trying to provide an environment for business students to study in without having to leave the building, unless they want to," said Stan Elsea, acting associate dean of the College of Business.

The center will include a student lounge, which will have a small kitchen, several individual study carousels and small group study areas with computer equipment linked to campus.

A conference room with a video camera for students to tape their presentations will also be added. And the computer lab currently in Calvin will be moved to the third floor.

"We hope the renovations will be done in a year or less," Elsea said.

Now, business students do not have a student lounge.

"Koch Industries in Wichita contributed money to begin the construction," Elsea said.

■ Future renovations

A improved sound system, which will include the new multimedia equipment, will be added to Williams Auditorium, commonly known as Umberger 105.

New bread snack expected to be success

Betsy Wooten
staff reporter

Low in fat, high in fiber, nutritious and great tasting.

These kinds of foods are in demand, and K-State plans to deliver.

"People want nutritious foods, and they want to be able to sit at their desks and eat out of a bag," Carol Klopfenstein, professor of grain science, said.

"What they eat ought to be good for them," she said.

The availability of nutritious foods is the reason seven students and faculty members are finding ways to make a new kind of snack food, she said.

Bite-sized snacks, which will be shaped like loaves of bread and the same texture as bread, could be on the market within a year, Klopfenstein said.

"They can be flavored with cinnamon and sugar or chocolate, plus they will be low in fat and high in fiber," she said.

K-State will use an extruder in Shellenberger Hall to create the new snacks.

"It's a really modern way of processing foods," Shanna Claytor, graduate student in grain science, said.

Extrusion is the process of baking snacks at a high temperature and pressure for a short time period, she said.

"It's the same process used to make cheese curls," Klopfenstein said.

The breads are baked in the extruder at 118 degrees Celsius for 15 seconds. Then they are dried for six to ten minutes, Claytor said.

The entire process is quick and the extruder bakes 100 pounds of mix at a time.

In four hours, 1,300 pounds of dry mix can be turned into miniature loaves of bread, she said.

"The loaves of bread were squeezed out of a quarter-inch slit," Claytor said.

Klopfenstein said once the product is perfected, information about the process will be published in a trade journal.

"Then companies like Keebler and Nabisco will use the information to manufacture the new low-fat snacks," she said.

Klopfenstein said she doesn't remember how the idea began, but the project had been supported by the Kansas Soybean Commission and the Kansas Corn Commission.

The commissions were looking for a way to add value to crops by creating a bigger market, she said.

The finished project might effect the future of snack food, Klopfenstein said.

"People don't realize that when they buy a package of low-fat food, they may be getting more calories," said Adam Small, graduate student in food science and technology.

"Pick up a box of fat-free Fig Newtons and look at the calories. Companies substitute the fat with a bunch of extra sugar."

But the new K-State produces snack will not include extra sugar, Klopfenstein said.

"We are using corn flour, soy cotyledon, corn bran, oat bran, sugar, salt, baking soda, emulsifiers and a little vegetable oil. The breads are naturally low fat and nutritious," Claytor said.

Some low-fat foods cost more because the ingredients cost more, Klopfenstein said.

"We're not using any fancy ingredients, so the little breads shouldn't cost more than regular snack food," she said.

Man left in holding cell for 5 days without food, bedding

Associated Press

SPOTSYLVANIA, Va. — A man convicted of a traffic offense languished for five days without food in a courthouse holding cell after a bailiff forgot about him over the long Labor Day weekend.

Allen Wilhelm, 25, was found Tuesday at the Spotsylvania County Courthouse after his father asked Sheriff T.C. Waddy about the young man's whereabouts.

"My stomach was growling and moving around and I was cold. I woke up and said 'Damn, I'm still here,"' Wilhelm said Wednesday. "It was like an icebox in there."

Wilhelm, who wore only jeans and a T-shirt in the cell, was examined at a hospital and found to have no serious health problems.

The 8-by-12-foot cell in the new, air-conditioned courthouse had running water and a toilet but no bedding. The sheriff said the temperature was about 70 degrees.

Last Thursday, Wilhelm had been ordered to spend two days in Rappahannock Regional Jail, about 10 miles from the courthouse, but he was never transferred. He had been convicted of driving with a suspended license.

Bailiff Steve Coleman was fired for leaving Wilhelm in the cell, the sheriff said. Waddy said Coleman was supposed to phone another deputy to pick up the prisoner but forgot to do so. Coleman couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

Commonwealth's Attorney William F. Neely, said he did not believe any law had been violated.

The clerk's office was open on Friday, but court was not in session. The office was closed Monday for Labor Day.

Courthouse workers said there is no way to hear someone in the holding cell from the clerk's office. An intercom that would have allowed Wilhelm to buzz someone in another courthouse office was not working, Waddy said.

"He could beat on the wall all day long, and nobody could hear him," the sheriff said.

Can Computers Hurt My Eyes?

More and more, computers have become part of our daily lives. Work on computers can cause symptoms of eyestrain and fatigue such as burning tired eyes, trouble maintaining focus, and blurry distance vision for a while after working at the computer. Taking frequent breaks, adjusting the contrast and room lighting may help with these symptoms of eyestrain. If you wear glasses, having a current prescription and adding an anti-reflective coating to the lenses may decrease eyestrain.

Enrollment down in school district

Jamie Dierkling
staff reporter

The superintendent for the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school district said enrollment was down about 133 students this year at a Board of Education meeting Wednesday evening.

Total enrollment is down, but classes coming up are larger, Superintendent Dan Yunk said.

Elementary school enrollment is down by 117 students; middle school is up by 42; and high-school student numbers are down by 43.

The decrease in enrollment will mean the school district will receive less money from the state.

However, a bill passed by the Kansas Legislature in spring changed the law so districts that lose enrollment will not lose as much money.

Construction continues for new schools being built in the district.

The Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School is slightly behind schedule, Kirk Horner, architect for the project, said.

"We're still shooting for a completion date of around May 8," Horner said.

The Susan B. Anthony Middle School is ahead of schedule and could be finished earlier than expected.

"It wouldn't surprise me to see this job done sometime in January or February," Horner said.

The Frank Bergman Elementary School will be dedicated at 2 p.m. Sunday.

The school, at 3430 Lumbar Drive, is the first to be built with funding from a city bond issue passed last year.

In other action, the board approved a 1.5-percent increase in teacher salaries for the 1995-96 school year.

The teachers had wanted a 3-percent increase.

However, the school district has had to make general operating budget cuts because of the building of the new schools.

The board also considered a proposal from the Middle School Planning Team that would change eighth-grade football from an intramural to interscholastic sport at the two new middle schools next year.

Mary Nichols, board member, said she thought there was already too much emphasis on football.

"I'm just really concerned at the message we are sending," she said.

The board expressed concern about player safety, costs and lack of planning.

Meryl Wilson, board member, said he was concerned for the safety of the players.

"If we're going to do this, we need to do it right or not do it at all," Meryl Wilson, board member, said.

He said he wanted to ensure that players received adequate instruction, and new coaches might need to be hired to do that.

The board asked the planning team to come up with a more specific plan and budget to present at the next meeting.

▶ PACKWOOD ANGRY ABOUT COMMITTEE VOTE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Ethics Committee voted unanimously Wednesday to recommend expulsion of Sen. Bob Packwood, who was charged by the panel in May with sexual and official misconduct, sources reported. A defiant Packwood called the decision totally and absolutely outrageous.

Even before the six-member committee officially announced its decision, the Oregon Republican released a statement condemning his colleagues.

"The entire process is so unfair," Packwood said in the statement. "I've never had a chance to cross-examine my accusers. Not one senator saw any complainant. Numerous witnesses with information contrary to what the accusers have said were completely ignored by the committee."

Packwood did not immediately indicate what his next move would be.

World Wide Web cartoon site allows Barney mutilation

Darin Siefkes
contributing writer

With all the sites to see on the World Wide Web, it's hard to know where to start. Here is the Collegian's first installment of Web site reviews, focusing on the best of the cartoon homepages.

The best pages are normally made for viewing with the current Netscape Navigator. If you don't have it, download it from (http://netscape.com/).

THE SIMPSONS
(http://springfield.com)

"The Simpsons" season finale ended with the startling question: "Who shot Mr. Burns?" and the producers have setup a page to hint at the answer.

It's one of the best commercial pages on the web because it gives clues on suspects, including profiles of all "The Simpsons" characters and even a bulletin board to discuss the crime.

You can find clips from "The Simpsons" to satisfy your craving until next season. The producers have pulled graphics from the TV show to give the page that Springfield feel.

DUCKMAN
(http://bluejay.creighton.edu/~jduche/duckman.html)

A complete collection of sounds, pictures and scripts is featured, including links to the other "Duckman" homepages.

ANIMANIACS
(http://www.cs.cmu.edu/afs/cs.cmu.edu/user/clamen/misc/tv/Animaniacs/Animaniacs.html)

"Animaniacs," the Warner Brothers' smash cartoon that follows the exploits of Yakko, Wakko and Dot, has become a cult hit on television as well as on the Internet.

This site has the traditional pictures and sounds, but most importantly, it has the "Pinky and the Brain: Are you thinking what I'm thinking?" quote list.

You can also find quotes on what the two diabolical mice say in every episode. A must-see for Pinky aficianados.

It also has a complete list of song lyrics used on the show and the "alternative" versions of the songs. Anything and everything else that you can think of with the Warner Brothers is here in one big homepage.

SPACE GHOST
(http://www.cis.ufl.edu/~fiser/Space_Ghost/)

This page took a lot of work, and it looks really cool.

The only problem is the amount of time it takes to view the page. You also need a sound application that plays .wav files.

It's a big page, so expect to wait for the machine to load up. It is worth the wait. The location also features special mini-pages for Moltar, Zorak and even Brak.

BARNEY FUN PAGE
(http://ugweb.cs.ualberta.ca/~gerald/barney)

The rules on this page are simple: you have a knife, gun, axe, uzi, shotgun, motorcycle and cannon. With these tools, you are able to turn the pathetic, purple dinosaur into a modern-art masterpiece.

You can also view other people's art attempts with this page.

Enjoy!

▶ WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

First lady rallies behind women activists in China

Associated Press

HUAIROU, China — American officials stranded in a rain-soaked crowd were shoved around by Chinese security forces Wednesday, marring Hillary Rodham Clinton's trip to show solidarity with women activists in the village outside Beijing.

The first lady got VIP treatment on her arrival for a speech at a theater-turned-conference center. But other members of her party — including Donna Shalala, the secretary of health and human services, and Winston Lord, the assistant secretary of state for the Far East — were left waiting outside in a chilly rain for half an hour.

The scene spotlighted some of the logistical problems and harassment that have affected thousands of women meeting separately from the Fourth World Conference of Women 30 miles away in Beijing. Clinton, in a speech a day earlier, had said China's treatment of the women was indefensible.

Clinton thanked them Wednesday for their perseverance. "You did not give up. You did not stay away. You are playing an important role in this conference," she said.

The rain resulted in Clinton's appearance being moved inside from a field that could have accommodated a large crowd. Hundreds of women, clad in ponchos or clutching umbrellas, struggled to get in the theater gates and through a crush of people at metal detectors.

Shalala and Lord, riding to Huairou on a press bus in Clinton's motorcade, were deposited at the outside edge of the crowd and had to push their way forward. When they reached the front, Chinese security forces shoved them away.

After repeated attempts, Shalala and Lord were finally admitted through a side door, their clothes soaked and their hair plastered to their heads. Clinton's press secretary, Lisa Caputo, was kept out until after the first lady spoke.

"The women's movement has been through tougher things than this," Shalala said good-naturedly.

And in Washington, the State Department brushed the incident aside.

"There's no reason to make a big deal about it," spokesman Nicholas Burns said. "It's hard to move 15,000 people into 1,500 seats, and that is, I think, the magnitude of the challenge this morning."

Outside the building, Chinese security officials broadcast announcements blaming the United States for causing the crowd-control problems by moving the speech indoors.

Inside, the theater was packed with more than 3,000 women, twice the building's capacity.

"We're going to keep on moving forward, never turning back," the women sang, holding hands and swaying side to side in their seats. "We're going to work for women's freedom, never turning back."

The activists are trying to shape the outcome of the women's conference in Beijing, and Clinton assured them their voices were being heard.

"You will be the key players in determining whether or not this conference goes beyond rhetoric and actually does something to improve the lives of women and families," Clinton said.

DEBATE

hours a day researching my topic. There will be people that spend more than eight hours a day on research," Denny said.

During the fall, the forensics team will compete in tournaments mainly in the Midwest.

They will be traveling throughout Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma.

Although each team does not travel to every forensics tournament, approximately 16 to 18 weekends will be spent on the road, Susan Stanfield, director of debate, said.

In the spring, the team travels all over the country.

Because the national tournament is in California this year, the team will be traveling to California at least one other time.

"The judging and style of debate is different in California than it is here," Stanfield said.

"It is important to get out there, see what people are doing and get seen early," she said.

BOARD

Student Publications, formerly served as secretary, but Johnson said he no longer wanted the position.

The Student Publications' general-privilege fee is up for review by Senate this year, and Otto said finance will be the board's main concern.

Johnson said the price of newsprint has gone up 50 percent in the last year, which amounts to a $25,000 cost increase for Student Publications.

Advertising was down $28,000 for the summer Collegian, and yearbook sales at fee payment were down by more than 700 books.

This means Student Publications is having to look at ways to cut costs.

"The editors and managers have worked hard to find ways to save money and make money," Johnson said.

To help offset some of the cost increases and revenue losses, the board voted to increase the price of campus directories.

The cost for students will be $3. Faculty members' cost will be $5. The cost to people not affiliated to the University will be $6.

The student increase was 50 cents; the faculty's increase was $1.50 cents and the non-University consumer increase was $1.75 over last year's prices.

The Collegian has tried to tighten its newspapers, which means there are more ads and less news in the paper.

A reduction in the number of pages in the yearbook has also been considered.

Linda Puntney, associate director of Student Publications and yearbook adviser, said the yearbook has been looking at new ways to market yearbooks.

"We are looking closely at what we are covering and if that is what the students want," she said.

under a command economy.

"There had been no experience, no theory of how to transform one into the other," Wiatr said. "We started in a different position because we were the first."

Poland began the Balcerowicz plan, which Wiatr said was shock therapy of the economy, Jan. 1, 1990. The plan entailed changing Poland's prices from those imposed by the communist government to world market prices.

"It was the quickest way from a command economy to a market economy," Wiatr said, adding he did not support this strategy initially.

"I have now to some degree changed my mind," Wiatr said. "It turned out that the radical strategy worked."

Wiatr said the plan has contributed toward Poland becoming the fastest-growing economy in Europe. For the third consecutive year, Poland's gross national product has risen from a 2-percent increase in 1993 to a 9-percent increase in 1995.

Wiatr said the transition from command economy to a market economy has not been smooth for Poles.

There is a 14.7-percent unemployment rate in Poland, Wiatr said. The situation of the lower class has increased the need for the resurgence of some socialist ideas.

"Some say this means we are making a return to communism," Wiatr said. "In fact, no signs of such a return can be traced in Poland, Hungary or Lithuania."

The national security of Poland also looks promising, Wiatr said.

With the Soviet Union no longer a threat to Poland, the country is in safe waters at least for now, Wiatr said.

Building its alliances with the European Union as well as NATO is important for Poland, he said.

"If Russia comes to be a great power, Poland will never be able to defend herself alone," Wiatr said.

Poland needs to create an alliance with NATO, but the presence of social democrats in the government might make this goal difficult to attain, said Jan Zytkow, professor of computer science at Wichita State University and former Solidarity leader at the University of Warsaw.

"Because of the presence of social democrats in the ruling coalition, NATO may hesitate to include Poland in it's membership," Zytkow said. "NATO would not want to compromise its military secrets"

Zytkow, who taught with Wiatr at the University of Warsaw, said Wiatr presented a one-sided view of the Polish situation from the perspective of former communists.

"People who have lived for 45 years under communist rule feel that neo-communists (social democrats) have no moral ground for being in the Polish government," Zytkow said.

"Further, they believe that since the communist rule turned into an economic disaster, it is doubtful whether the same type of people can create a strong economy."

plans to bring in outside consultants.

The location of the jail is a decision that has been in limbo since November, when a bond issue to expand the existing jail was defeated.

Some residents were opposed to expanding the existing jail on Sixth and Colorado streets because it is in a residential area and close to a church and a school.

Jail CORP, an organization against the bond issue, said the jail would not have room to expand farther in the future without acquiring more land.

"It's better to bring someone from the outside because they don't care about the politics," McCulloh said.

McCulloh said two city commissioners, the presiding judge and all the key players have been working with the National Institution of Corrections Program to find a location.

She said she hopes the city will have a consultant by Nov. 1 and a site chosen by February.

"The plan is to get on the ballot in the fall of 1996," she said. "It will probably be in either the primary or general elections."

Ilene Colbert, Riley County clerk, said she thought another reason the bond issue failed was that residents did not want to pay the half-cent sales tax that was also part of the issue.

"I think people are just tired of high taxes," Colbert said.

McCulloh and Colbert both said the project's funding will come from either property or sales taxes.

McCulloh said the commissioners must take their time when deciding on a project of this size and expense.

The building will cost a minimum of $8 million. The county will also have to provide a staff for the new law-enforcement center, which could add millions of dollars to the project, she said.

McCulloh said whenever a complex needs to be staffed 24 hours a day, it takes 5-1/2 employees for every position.

"We need to take a lot of time in planning and do it right," she said.

McCulloh said Manhattan residents should not be overly concerned with jail locations because the jail is used to hold prisoners on a short-term basis.

Inmate stays can be a few hours or 90 days or longer, she said.

"I can't think of any instances where they would stay over one year," she said.

McCulloh said the the inmates' offenses are generally non-violent, and most of the local crimes are minor offenses, such as graffiti and shoplifting.

The public has a chance to voice opinions concerning the jail Issue at 7 tonight in the Manhattan City Fire Station at the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues.

"We'd be delighted to have any and all of the public attend. We want the public's input," McCulloh said. "We desperately need this."

She said even if the bond is voted on this fall, it will take another 18 months to build. Construction could be completed in spring 1988.

Those who don't attend the meeting can give suggestions to any county commissioner, McCulloh said.

NATO jets continue bombing

■ Peace talks set for Friday in Geneva

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Sarajevo resounded with explosions late Wednesday as NATO jets bombarded Bosnian-Serb targets. But the rebel Serb commander did not bend, refusing to move his guns away from the besieged capital.

As the West's test of wills with rebel Gen. Ratko Mladic hardened, other Bosnian-Serb leaders tried to squelch rumors of a rift in their ranks that could complicate peace talks set for Friday.

NATO jets swooped through a cloudless night sky Wednesday, visible in the light of a nearly full moon before fog enveloped the city.

They struck around the Serb-occupied southwestern suburb of Lukavica about 8:20 p.m. (3:30 a.m. CDT), according to United Nations officials. About 90 minutes later, two more explosions were heard in the northwest. U.N. officials and witnesses reported two more attacks on the Lukavica area, as well as another near Serb-occupied Hadzici to the west.

"The weather has cleared over Sarajevo, and NATO has resumed airstrikes," said Maj. Buster Hows of the U.N. rapid-reaction force.

Those troops also saw action late Wednesday, firing 18 105-mm and 155-mm artillery shells at a Serb mortar that fired on traffic over the treacherous Mount Igman road, according to U.N. spokesman Maj. Guy Vinet. That route is the only road out of the besieged city.

U.S. Adm. Leighton Smith, NATO commander for southern Europe, said in Naples, Italy, that reports indicated very successful results from earlier attacks Wednesday, despite some cloudy weather. He did not give details.

NATO has flown more than 1,500 missions in the last week since launching its biggest operation yet in the 3-1/2-year-old war. The attacks, aimed primarily at easing the Serb threat to the besieged Bosnian capital, were prompted by mortar attack blamed on the Serbs killed 38 people in Sarajevo.

NATO suspended its raids Friday to allow for negotiations. But the big guns remained in place after the Monday deadline passed, and NATO jets took to the skies again Tuesday.

> WILLIAM PERRY
> DEFENSE SECRETARY

NATO showed film of Tuesday's hits by U.S. and French aircraft on several Bosnian Serb targets, including military command centers and ammunition depots going up in huge clouds of smoke.

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary William Perry said U.S. laser-guided bombs had generally hit within 10 feet of their intended targets as planned.

"The campaign will go on as long as needed and as intensely as needed to accomplish the objectives," Perry said.

NATO said it was trying to limit its attacks to selected military installations to avoid harassing the Serbs so much that they couldn't organize a withdrawal.

Gen. Manojlo Milutinovic, the Bosnian-Serb forces' chief of staff, spoke of only minor losses among his soldiers and several civilian casualties.

But the Bosnian-Serb army information service late Wednesday, claimed that 100 civilians had been killed and hundreds more wounded in the NATO bombing runs.

Bosnian-Serb police and military officials reported that Wednesday's targets included military installations in Kalinovik, 25 miles south of Sarajevo and Mladic, the Serb military commander's hometown.

"We gather he's in a defiant mood," U.N. spokesman Alexander Ivanko said of the tough-talking Mladic. "But we hope this mood will change and he will start complying with our demands.

"Every day of NATO airstrikes means his army is being clobbered, and clobbered and clobbered. For this clobbering to stop, he has to remove the heavy weapons from around Sarajevo."

Ivanko said the U.N. had not been in contact with Mladic since Monday, when he rejected U.N. demands that a senior aide to Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, had basically accepted a few hours earlier.

"There may be a certain disarray among the Bosnian Serbs, and that is why orders coming from one end are not being followed through the other end," Ivanko said.

Karadzic, who recently was forced to rescind Mladic's demotion after most generals lined up behind their commander, sought Wednesday to counter growing signs that Mladic was calling the shots on the battlefield.

He asserted that the Serbs already had accepted most of the U.N. demands, which include reopening Sarajevo's airport and roads into the city, an end to attacks on U.N. safe areas and guarantees of free movement for U.N. and aid workers.

But in separate comments to reporters, Karadzic appeared to embrace Mladic's line, rejecting the West's key demand that all the Serb heavy weaponry be moved at least 12-1/2 miles from Sarajevo.

Atlanta police officers charged with corruption

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Six police officers were charged with corruption Wednesday after colleagues complained that they were stealing cash during searches and taking protection money from cocaine dealers.

"It is particularly important now, with the Olympics less than a year away, that the Atlanta Police Department and all of law enforcement in Atlanta make sure that our houses are not just clean but spotless," U.S. Attorney Kent Alexander said.

The six were charged with extortion and a civil-rights violation. Five were arrested, and the sixth was being sought.

The charges allege that two of the officers searched the apartment of a Vietnamese man and told him it was illegal to possess more than $5,000 in cash, then stuffed $7,264 inside their uniform shirts. An undercover FBI agent posing as a drug dealer was given $1,710 for tipping them that the man had a lot of money.

One of the two officers is also accused of accepting $1,000 a week in protection money since April 14 from a drug dealer, while another officer is accused of accepting protection money from the agent for the past two months, and of giving the agent a gun.

The investigation started a year ago after complaints from fellow officers.

"The bigger story is that we do have a number of officers who felt so compelled and moved by what they were hearing going on that they came forward and spoke out," Police Chief Beverly Harvard said.

It is the second case of police corruption in the metro region in three years. In the earlier case, nine officers, including two from Atlanta, were convicted of robbery, burglary and the slaying of a nightclub owner.

112 booths scheduled for carnival

Jennifer Cawley
staff reporter

The 39th Annual Activities Carnival is designed to help students learn about different organizations and activities.

"I heard that it's something you should really go to because it's a good way to get involved with the school, find things you're interested in and meet lots of people," Kristen Carrel, freshman in pre-medicine, said.

The carnival, which is sponsored by the promotions committee of the Union Program Council, invited all University groups registered with the University Activities Board to participate at the carnival.

CARNIVAL
▶ The Activities Carnival will be from 4 to 7 p.m. Sunday on the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

"We do it in order for University students to be able to explore all options to be extracurricularly involved," Julie Grimes, UPC Promotions advisor, said. "It's an overall view of what KSU has to offer."

This year's carnival will have 112 booths. Setting up booths are an opportunity for clubs to show what they offer and recruit new members.

"A lot of students don't even know that there is a Phi Theta Kappa alumni chapter at K-State," said Linnette Brummett, Phi Kappa Theta advisor.

Phi Kappa Theta is an honorary society at community colleges.

The carnival will help alert students that clubs are here, Brummett said.

Students will find other surprises besides new clubs at the carnival, as well.

There will be demonstrations, a KSDB-FM 91.9 live remote and one more perk for students attending.

"Free food. It's a new thing and one of our biggest added attractions," said Barb Firth, secretary of UPC.

Colby to get free Internet access

Associated Press

COLBY, — Soon, not only will this northwestern Kansas town be linked with the rest of the nation by Interstate 70, it will be linked with the rest of the world by the information superhighway.

Colby will be one of 10 communities across the United States and its territories to receive a computer system and software to establish a Free-Net, a community computer network that will provide free local information, link health care providers, allow users to communicate with one another and, for a fee, give users direct access to the Internet.

The Thomas County Free-Net grew out of Colby's attempts to update its strategic plan in the early 1990s, John Bremenkamp, a former county commissioner, said.

During the strategic planning process, the community identified health care as a major concern

▶ CITY MANAGER

Post close to being filled

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

Manhattan might have a new city manager by Saturday.

City commissioners have begun interviewing six candidates for the position.

The first executive session was Wednesday. The final interviews will be Friday and Saturday.

"They'll possibly have a decision made by the end of the day Saturday, but there are no guarantees," Ron Fehr, acting city manager, said.

Mayor Edith Stunkel said after the commission makes its final decision on the new city manager, it could be as little as 30 days or as many as 60 days before the new manager takes over.

The city manager position became vacant after city commissioners voted against renewing former city manager Jim Pearson's contract in April. After conducting seven executive sessions concerning Pearson's contract, Stunkel and commissioners Sydney Carlin and Steve Hall voted against his renewal in a 3-2 vote.

Upon termination, Pearson filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission Aug. 7, alleging he was terminated because of his age and a physical disability.

CANDIDATES
▶ The city manager candidate reception will be 5:30-7:30 p.m. Sept. 8 at the Manhattan Headquarters Fire Station, 2000 Denison Ave., in the large assembly room.

Pearson, 53, has had prosthetic legs below both of his knees for 10 years because of a congenital arteriole defect.

He said he has not heard anything from the Human Rights Commission or the city concerning the discrimination complaint.

"I wish it was moving faster, but there's not a lot I can do," Pearson said.

He said he has been doing some private consultant work and is still looking for a permanent job.

David Stutzman, a city attorney, said the city filed a response with the Human Rights Commission about two-to-three weeks ago.

"The city has denied all claims of discrimination," he said.

Justification for fees called for by Senate

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

Student Senate voted Thursday night to examine the services of all groups with privilege fees up for review this year.

The fees for Student Publications Inc., the Intercollegiate Department of Athletics, Lafene Health Center, Fine Arts Council, Union Program Council and Bramlage Coliseum are up for review.

Student SENATE

The budget resolution requires all organizations with fees up for review to provide Senate with justification for its fees.

The resolution also requires the six campus groups to provide information on how user fees would affect services.

User fees would require only those who use certain campus services to pay for them.

"This budget resolution is just a starting point," Mark Tomb, Privilege Fee Committee chairman, said.

Tomb said the resolution was designed to be a framework for evaluating the fees and the services provided with the fee money.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said he was opposed to some of the wording in Section 1 of the resolution. The resolution said Senate would dedicate itself to reducing the financial burden on students.

"I have a fundamental problem with the wording," Otto said. "You are literally tying your hands behind your back."

Gip Githens, education senator, proposed an amendment that changed the wording of Section 1 to say Senate would examine reducing the burden.

"I feel this resolution is binding," Githens said.

By changing the wording, he said he thought Senate would have more room to look at what needed to be done for the good of the service and the student body.

"We do not know what lies before us," Githens said.

Tomb said all resolutions are nonbinding.

Githen's amendment passed.

Two other amendments were proposed, but both failed. The second amendment would have deleted Section 1, and amendment three would have changed the wording again.

The budget resolution passed with a vote of 53-4.

The appointment of two arts and sciences senators and an education senator were also approved at Thursday's meeting. Wendy Strevey and JoAnna Rothwell were confirmed as arts and sciences senators, and Mark Wendt was confirmed as an education senator. The three were next on the election list to fill vacancies left by the resignation of other senators.

Jon's Notes closes down under faculty pressure

Associated Press

MANHATTAN — A classroom note-taking business that created a stir on the K-State campus last spring has stopped operating — but may try a comeback next year.

The Manhattan operation of Jon's Notes Inc., a Nebraska-based business, closed because of opposition, but the business operates at a number of universities around the country — including the University of Kansas, Penn State and Florida.

Jan Trulson, the manager of Jon's Notes at K-State, said she blames herself for the controversy. She said she should have informed professors about the service before her part-time workers — all students — started taking notes in classes.

Now Trulson is trying to find a new location so the service can operate next semester. She said professors had pressured

Women address race problems at K-State

Jeff Bucholz
staff reporter

The Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority sponsored a forum last night which addressed issues that African-American women face at K-State.

"When we got to college, we thought there'd be so much more to do to further the race," Shanta Bailey, senior in psychology, said.

Yet what African-American women find is that with all the issues they get lost in what is the real issue — getting that degree, Beverly McLean-Murray, assistant professor in public relations, said.

"You've got to work on a day-to-day basis," she said.

Starting with yourself, the individual, is how one can overcome any issue, Farrell Webb, assistant professor in human ecology, said.

"When we are silent, we are condoning. To have power, use your voice," Olga Davis, assistant professor in speech, said.

"Be real. Stop demanding respect; make people earn it."
OMAR DAVIS, SENIOR IN PSYCHOLOGY

"People need to strive for individuality, stay focused and realize the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow is the degree," Chiquita Miller-Henry, senior in social work, said.

As students, we need to get a pro-active attitude to make changes, said Jawwad Abdulhaqq, junior in political science and president of Black Student Union.

One of the issues raised brought a lot of concern from the faculty who attended — the issue of "being white."

"This is to say, 'black people who do succeed, they try to disassociate themselves with their race,'" said Kimberly House, junior in marketing and vice president of Alpha Kappa Alpha.

Some people say "being white" is bad because African-American students getting an education do remember their culture, yet they get embarrassed around some people by what they do or say, Korri Hall, sophomore in electrical engineering, said.

Some of the solutions suggested by the faculty and the students were to set up mentors for freshmen, be an example as upperclassmen, respect yourself and have a direction.

"Be real. Stop just demanding respect; make people earn it," Omar Davis, senior in psychology, said.

African-American women need a person that they could aspire to be like, not just one characteristic, but a total package, Stacey Davis, senior in microbiology, said.

COURT-MARTIAL HEARING PLANNED FOR FORT RILEY SOLDIER

Staff Sgt. Dennis Boyd of Fort Riley is awaiting court-martial procedures for allegedly murdering his wife, Karen, who was found Monday in her quarters.

Dennis Boyd was released from the Irwin Community Hospital Wednesday for self-inflicted stab wounds and then was taken immediately into custody by the U.S. Army.

Autopsy reports of Karen Boyd have not yet been released. Fort Riley Information officer Deb Skidmore said Thursday that no cause of death has been released, and it could be seven to 10 days before the results are made public.

Skidmore also said she wasn't sure when Dennis Boyd's court-martial hearings would begin.

AIR RAIDS CONTINUE ON SERBS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — NATO jets streamed through a break in the clouds and fog Thursday, stepping up raids on Bosnian Serb military targets and setting off thunderous blasts that rattled windows miles away in Sarajevo.

Yet rebel Serb leaders refused to accede to the Western alliance's main demand to withdrawal of the heavy guns that have terrorized Sarajevo for more than three years. To do so, one Serb hardliner said, would be capitulation.

The Serb position could sink peace talks Friday in Geneva that are to include the foreign ministers of Bosnia, Croatia and Serb-led Yugoslavia.

The Yugoslav government, empowered to negotiate for the Bosnian Serbs, urged an end to the aerial bombardment and said it was a direct attack on the current negotiations.

SEN. PACKWOOD STEPS DOWN

WASHINGTON D.C. (AP) — A teary-eyed Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., announced his resignation Thursday, heading off a vote by colleagues to expel him for allegations of sexual and official misconduct after 27 years in the Senate.

"It is the honorable thing to do," he said in an emotional speech shortly after leaders of the Ethics Committee warned him he would have to quit or face expulsion.

Packwood, who earlier vowed to fight the charges, gave up less than 24 hours after the panel voted unanimously to recommend that he be expelled.

The committee, evenly divided between Democrats and Republicans, had spent 33 months on the investigation. It concluded he should be expelled after studying allegations he made unwanted sexual advances toward 17 women, tried to obtain a job for his then-estranged wife from people with legislative interests and altered his diaries to obstruct the investigation.

ANCIENT VOLCANO RESEARCHED

WASHINGTON D.C. (AP) — A volcanic eruption that lasted a million years and flooded Siberia with lava a mile deep may have killed 80 percent of the world's animals — an extinction far more deadly than the later one that claimed the dinosaurs, researchers said.

Precise dating of geologic samples that mark the extinction 250 million years ago show the massive die-off occurred at about the same time a volcanic eruption blanketed Siberia with lava and filled the global sky with chemicals, scientists report Friday in the journal Science.

"We have been able to put a very precise date on the extinction boundary (formation), something that has not been done before," said Mark Richards, an University of California, Berkeley, professor of geophysics and co-author of the study.

The date of that extinction, which marks the shift from the Permian to the Triassic period, was the same, within a few thousand years, as the Siberian eruptions.

Richard said basalt lava from deep within the Earth poured out of fissures in Siberia and flowed like scorching cookie dough across thousands of square miles. Up to a cubic mile of lava belched out annually for about one million years, he said.

Regents' schools face change

■ Linear tuition's fate up to Kansas Legislature

There are many challenges ahead for the Kansas Board of Regents, John Hiebert, chairman of the board, said.

At a time when student enrollment is expected to increase the outlook for higher education, funding looks bleak, he said.

"We've gone from austere to bleak from a standpoint of funding," Hiebert said.

Hiebert and Stephen Jordan, executive director of the board, visited K-State Thursday and met with student leaders, faculty members and administrators.

During a press conference, Hiebert and Jordan discussed the recent decision to switch to a linear-tuition system at K-State and the University of Kansas.

The decision, which was passed by the board, is now in the hands of Kansas Legislature, Hiebert said.

Hiebert said he is optimistic that the state Legislature will pass the new system because there is support for it among legislators.

This new system will allow students easier affordability for enrollment in more than one institution, Hiebert said.

"This should be a benefit for students, because they'll get what they pay for," Jordan said.

The system now is a revenue maximizer because very few students take 15 hours or more, Jordan said.

However, because most students will be paying less, a 3-percent increase in tuition will be added to compensate for the lost revenue, Jordan said.
